The Old Man's Dream.

BY OLIVER W. HOLMES.

Oh, for one hour of youthful joy!
Give back my twentieth spring!
I'd rather laugh, a bright-haired boy,
Than reign a gray-haired king.

Off with the wrinkled spoils of age;
Away with learning's crown;
Tear out life's wisdom-written page,
And cast its trophies down.

One moment let my life-blood stream
From boyhood's fount of flame;
Give me one giddy, reeling dream
Of life, and love and fame.

My listening angel heard the prayer,
And calmly smiling said:
"If I but touch thy silver hair,
Thy hasty wish had sped.

"But is there nothing in the track,
To bid thee fondly stay,
While the swift season's hurry back
To find the wished-for day?"

Ah, truest soul of womankind!
Without thee what were life?
One bliss I cannot leave behind—
I'll take my precious wife!

The angel took a sapphire pen,
And wrote in rainbow hue,
"The man would be a boy again,
And be a husband too!"

"And is there nothing yet unsaid
Before the change appears?
Remember all their gifts have fled
With these dissolving years!"

"Why, yes, I would one favor more;
My fond paternal joys—
I could not bear to lose them all;
I'll take my girls and boys."

The smiling angel dropped his pen,
"Why, this will never do;
The man would be a boy again,
And be a father too!"

And so I laughed. My laughter woke
The household with its noise,
I wrote my dream when morning broke,
To please my girls and boys.

WISE AND OTHERWISE.

—It must make a prisoner raven mad to be called a jail-bird.

—An unprincipled bachelor says that troubles never come singly.

—According to slang, Delaware is "just old peaches" of a State.

—Noah paddled his own canoe, and had no hier-archical notions.

—Quick sail and small profit—Coming in second at a yacht race.

—Live beyond your means and you will soon find it beyond your means to live.

—An exchange says Springfield has a poetess named Hatchet, and she writes whenever she's axed to.

—Economy is beginning to prevail again. At the funeral on Sunday a number of men appeared with unblacked boot heels.

—Sam Music has been arrested for murder in Illinois. He can plead self-defence—so many people have murdered psalm music.

—An Indiana dog has unmistakeable chills and fever, shaking the confidence of the doctors in the preventative influence of canine bark.

—"How much is a metre?" asks a Cleveland paper. Wait till the gas man comes around—he'll give you liberal figures.

—If young ladies wish to get stout they should eat their food slowly. Haste does not make waist in such cases.

—Matilda Cross—Cairo—single woman—weighs 422 pounds—says she wants someone to love her for herself alone.

—Manoeuvring mosquitos multiply marvelously, meditating mischief; malicious mosquitos mercilessly maul multitudes, munching masters and misses.

—When they catch a man gathering Delaware peaches at midnight they preserve whatever good traits he has in him by shooting half a pint of salt into his legs.

—Henry Swan, of Otsego, N.Y., called his wife to him as he was dying and said: "Mary Jane, when you feed the hogs to-morrow night you'll be the widow Swan." And she was.

—A man would have preached in Virginia City the other day, had not a rock struck him between the shoulders. This is the nearest thing to Sunday services they have had there in five years.

—A Somerset young woman, seventy-eight years of age, became tired of life the other day and hung herself to a bed-post with a corset, We always thought corsets were unhealthy—especially when worn about the neck.

—Sam—I say Jim, how does you like my sweet of clothes? Jim—Sweet ob clothes! Go 'long! You mean suit of clothes. Sam—Go 'long wid yer ownself you black ignoramus. Don't folks as know French say sweet of rooms? Well, de same am applicable to clothes. Go whitewash yerself.

—A woman near Wilton couldn't find the peck measure, and she called to her boy: "Here, Tom, take my bustle and give the preacher's horse all the oats it will hold.

—Buckwheat won't be more than half a crop in New York State this year, but the seven-year what-do-you-call-it has made its appearance to help matters along.

—Frank Moulton said to a newspaper man the other day: "There's a shot-gun, and there's the door; which do you take?" The journalist didn't take either—he took to his heels.

—John Henry had a guest to dinner the other day, and during a pause in the conversation, the enfant terrible spoke up: "I wish I was you?" "Do you, little boy, and why do you wish you were me?" "Cos you don't get your ear pinched when you eat vittles with your knife."

—A Wyoming jury, composed of seven men and five women, were shut up two days and two nights and yet they could not agree. It is said that if they had remained out for seventeen years there would have been no verdict, as the five women talked the seven men deaf the first six hours.

—"Job printing?" exclaimed an old lady, the other day, as she peeped over her spectacles, at the advertising page of a country newspaper. "Poor Job! they've kept him printing, week after week, ever since I larn't to read; and if he wasn't the patientest man that ever was, he never could have stood it so long, no how!"

—A New Jersey granger heard a great noise among his chickens the other evening, and thinking thieves were despoiling his roost, he rushed out with vengeance in his eye and a shot-gun in his hand, but discovered no one about. Then he counted his fowls, but instead of some being missing, he found six more than belonged to him. His eyesight being a little defective, he couldn't discover until the next morning that he had counted six vigorous mosquitos of the New Jersey brand, which had been accidentally fastened in the coop with his hens. "I thought they was rather too big for chickens when I counted 'em," he afterwards remarked.

—A certain Whitehaller is in the habit of using the common expression, "By-the-way," to a considerable extent. Some time ago, during a religious awakening, he experienced a change of heart, and began attendance at protracted meetings. Finally, one evening, he gained courage enough to rise and offer a prayer. He did well until the closing up, when he abruptly sat down without the usual "Amen." As he dropped into his seat the omission occurred to him, when he arose quickly, and with the index finger of the right hand extended toward the presiding pastor, exclaimed, "Oh, by-the-way—Amen," and immediately resumed his seat.

Three Young Girls Attacked by a Buck Deer.

Yesterday afternoon three young women residing near the Big Brink Pond, in Shohola township, Penn., started to go berrying. They were obliged to cross the pond to reach the woods. Before entering the boat they saw something in the distance swimming in the water. Thinking it was a dog they paid no further attention to it, but started on their way across the pond, which is about two miles wide. After rowing for several hundred yards, the girl who was piloting the boat saw that what they first supposed to be a dog swimming in the water was a buck which was coming directly towards them. Having a clumsy pair of oars, it was sometime before the boat could be turned and then the deer had reached to within a few yards of them. The girls became greatly terrified, for the deer was fast gaining upon them, and from the way it snorted and plunged, they were satisfied it meant mischief. While one rowed with might, the other two paddled, thus somewhat increasing their speed; but the deer was slowly gaining on them, and knowing they could not reach the shore before being overtaken, they ceased rowing and prepared for the inevitable battle. When the deer, snorting and plunging had reached to within a few feet of the boat, it stopped for a moment. Then it made a sudden plunge, and as its head struck the side of the boat the brave girls brought down their raised paddles upon it with such force as to drive it under water. The girls again raised their weapons, and as the head rose to the surface they again brought their paddles to bear upon it with the same result.

When the deer again raised from the water it seemed to realise that this was to be the death struggle, and its eyes gleamed like balls of fire. It made a lunge, and threw its fore feet over the side of the boat, near the oar locks. This nearly capsized the clumsy craft, and threw Maggie Jordan, the oldest of the three, into the water; but as she fell she caught the side of the boat, and was hauled in by one of her companions. Then the heroine at the oars, as she felt the animal's breath in her face, raised her paddle and struck for her life, and as the blow fell across the deer's head the blood started from its nostrils, and it sank back helpless and seemingly dead, but really only stunned. The girls then started for the shore, leaving the deer struggling between life and death in the water.

Reaching the shore one of the girls ran to a small log cabin, an eighth of a mile distant, in which lived a family by the name of Berger, and told what had occurred. Mr. Berger seized his rifle and went to the pond, where he found the wonderful deer yet struggling in the water, a few yards from the shore. He rowed out to it and seizing it by the antlers, cut its throat, and towed the body to the shore. The deer was the largest ever killed in the neighborhood, weighing 227 pounds.

Betting on a Man's Own Game.

Hiram Robinson was a rich and jolly bachelor. One afternoon, as they sat smoking after dinner, Jim Clark, one of Hiram's guests, commented on the beauty of a new dining table which the latter had recently purchased. "It's the finest black walnut I ever saw," said Jim, "and the only fault I have to find with the table is this, it's just a little too high. A table shouldn't exceed two feet five, and this is at least one inch higher."

"I'll bet you," said Hiram, "that this is only twenty-nine inches high." Don't bet, Hiram; I'm sure of it—for my eye, as I have reason to know, is always correct." "I'll bet you fifty pounds, Jim, that it is only twenty-nine inches high." "Oh, if you're willing, Hiram, I'll take the bet; but I tell you beforehand that the table is at least thirty inches high." "Of course, Jim, if you're right, I'll pay over the money at once." "Well, then fork over the coin. I measured the table this very morning, and it's just thirty inches high," and Jim burst into a fit of laughter. "I know you did," said Hiram, "for I saw you do it, and knowing what a penchant you have for practical joking I immediately suspected your object. As soon as you left the house I sent for a carpenter and had an inch sawed off every leg, so you see, my dear friend Jim, that the biter has been bitten. Hand over the cash." Jim paid Hiram the fifty pounds, amid the laughter of everybody but himself.

Queen Victoria at Home.

The good motherly Queen dances in the Hall of Balmoral with her retainers and household servants, makes her own tea when out on picnics, spins in the cottages of her tenants, and has herself photographed in the gracious acts; bestows "warm flannel petticoats" on poor old women with her own hands, and tells us all about it in her own book. The Prince of Wales goes everywhere, dines with everybody and drives a drag—for all the world as though he were no greater man than the President of the United States. The new court dress for gentlemen is a simple half-military costume. Gaudy liveries are going out in high places, so that lackeys look less like lobsters and lizards than formerly, and I doubt not that, long ere it is ready to fall to pieces from sheer old age, like the Deacon's "one-horse shay," the royal state coach will be remanded, Tritons and all, to that Valhalla of old state coaches, the first hall in the Kensington Museum, and the monarchs of England will cease to lumber along on wheels like to those of Pharaoh's chariot, but may drive through the streets of London, even on the grandest state occasions, with celerity, comfort and quiet elegance, like other sensible well-to-do folk.—Grace Greenwood.

She Cured Him.

At last she completely cured him. For months she had patiently endured the pangs that so many thousands of young wives are compelled to suffer. Almost every morning at breakfast the heartless husband expressed the hope that he might live to see the day when he should get such coffee as he used to get at home, or such corn bread as his mother was wont to make and bake. At dinner the meat was overbaked in the range. To be sure his mother used to roast the meat in an old fashioned Dutch tin oven, and the piece was done to a turn—the last turn of the revolving spit. Those days were forever gone. But he might and ought to get such a green apple pie, with new cheese, as his mother used to give him. At length the long-suffering wife arose in her wrath, upset the table, sending the dishes and their contents crashing on the carpet, then strided over to the astonished husband, gave him a box on the ear which knocked him off his chair, and remarked, "There's a clip over the head for you such as your mother used to give you when you were a boy." Thereafter there was domestic peace and quiet in that house, with never even allusion to the maternal cookery and comforts of the by-gone days.

—The coming man is he who owns you.

Boys at Home and Abroad.

There is nothing that cultivates a boy so rapidly, and in so satisfactory a direction, as being able to put into writing anything he wants to say. The inscription so oddly composed, so phonetically spelled, which adorns the fly leaf of the Tennyson presented last birthday to his mother, the first lisping numbers in which mine rhymes to Valentine, the magniloquent prose epitaph on a dog or canary bird loved and lost—all such things may be utterly ridiculous, and may bring a blush in after years to the downy cheek, but the time devoted to their composition was not thrown away. It is very desirable that when a boy goes to school, writing home should present no difficulties. A few lines in pencil to tell how he has gained a place in his class, or had a splendid paper hunt, the power of easily replying to a little sister's letter will keep up the close ties of home which ought not to be undervalued. We have known educated gentlemen who would rather walk a mile to answer a letter than write half-a-dozen lines. The strange compositions that may often be seen in the newspapers with respectable names attached to them show how very useful a little early education and practice in letter-writing would be to public men. A little practical knowledge of arithmetic also is very easily acquired. The first three rules can be taught by a few pieces of paper torn up and made into sums, so as to give the pupil something more than an abstract idea of what figures mean. Many young men get into debt because they have never been accustomed to manage an allowance; everything has been paid for them. The number of pence in a shilling, of shillings in a pound, is not to be acquired by learning tables, but by spending money and keeping an account of it. The boy who is accustomed to provide himself with certain articles out of a fixed sum will, by the time he is grown up, have an idea of what things cost. A regular allowance can scarcely be begun too soon. Parents might, perhaps, confide to their eldest children the actual state of their finances more frequently than they do. They would often be rewarded for their confidence by a sense of chivalry among the boys, preventing them from spending at college more than was necessary. The lads would be ashamed to encroach, as they have so often done, on the slender portions laid by for their sisters. In families not engaged in business there is no possible reason why the children should not know a good deal about income and expenditure. A profound mystery is generally made of the subject. The consequence is that the young people think their father is a sponge full of gold-dust, out of whom as much money as possible is to be squeezed.

Trifles for the Ladies.

The Princess of Wales presented the Mayoress of Sheffield, at the conclusion of her visit to that place, with a magnificent gold bracelet, having a band of cut turquoises with pearls and diamonds.

The man who delivered the following toast is dead now: "Old Bachelors: Like sour cider, they grow more crabbed the longer they are kept, and when they see a little mother they turn to vinegar at once."

A Tennessee girl told a fellow she would give him a kiss if he would catch her. She ran well till she got out of sight of the old folks, and then gave in. This shows what a Tennessee girl will do when she's hard run.

Burlington Hawkeye: It is generally conceded that Lot's wife wouldn't have looked back, but a woman with a primitive pull-back dress on passed her, and the temptation to see how it was made overcame her fears of impending doom and she was salted.

An old woman in Bridgeport who has pasted nearly five thousand medical recipes in a book during the past forty years has never been sick a day in her life, and she is growing discouraged. Some people are born to ill-luck, she says.

There once was a time in the good long ago,
When 'twas modesty said "she's two strings to her bow."
But the Napanee girl thinks 'tis hardly the thing
Unless she can say "I've two beaux to my string."

Miss Luck was pronounced the best and most expeditious cook at the late Cincinnati fair. The facts upon which the award was made were as follows: In thirty minutes Miss Luck cooked, and cooked well, potatoes, chickens, porter-house steak, tomatoes, and corn, and biscuit, and set the table in the neatest style. That's the girl we want.

"How is it," said a woman to her husband, "that you can't come home nights in some kind of season?" You got me in the way of it," was his gentle retort. "Before we were married you used to throw your arms about my neck at three o'clock and say, 'Don't go, darling, it's early yet,' but now if I happen to stay out till two it is a terrible affair."

A Dutch Victory.

The crowd of young chaps about town were in one of the popular beer saloons yesterday, were they met a jolly old German, who often gets thoroughly soaked in beer and maudlin funny.

"Hello, Kaiserlicher, have you heard the news? said one.

"Nein; vas ish das?"

"The water-works are busted!"

"Vel, dot's bad mit dem tembrance beeples, don'd id, poys?" [Laugh all round.]

"Yes, and the rolling-mill's gone up!" said another of the boys.

"Vel, chust don't got skeered aboud dat; it's so heffy dot it soon goom down again, eh!" [A grand peal of laughter.]

"And—and—the ice machine has exploded!" cried a third.

"Is dot bin pozzible? Den dot's bad, midoud some misdake, and id don'd rain midout it pours—de vasser oud—de rolling-mill oud—no more ize—unt all you young shackasses broke oud of de stable lot! Dot makes me gry!"

And nobody thought it necessary to laugh at this point.

Justly Indignant.

There is a woman living on Farmer street who is an even ninety-nine years old, and the other day an ambitious reporter went around there to chat with her and ask her if she remembered anything about Hull's surrender. By mistake he knocked at the wrong door, and the lady of the house, aged about forty, opened it and demanded his business.

"I came here to see the old woman," he replied.

"Don't talk that way to me, you brassy, skulking loafer," she hotly answered.

"Why, madam, I wanted to interview the old——"

"You'll interview no one around here, you wretch you! The idea of you calling me the old woman!"

"Madam, I assure you that I heard there was an old woman——"

"Git out—travel—purloose!" she yelled, and she banged him off the steps. He picked up his hat and sought to explain, but she slammed the door shut and he heard her call out:

"Sarah! Sarah! Let the dog loose and hand me that ax-handle!"—Free Press.

HOUSEHOLD HELPS.

Corn husks shreded fine make plump and cheap pillow filling, and they are pleasanter for the head than feathers.

Canning Tomatoes.—Scald the tomatoes and mash them through a cullender. Put them in an earthen vessel, season to taste with salt and pepper, heat the can and place them in sealing immediately.

Custard for Cake.—The juice of four lemons, two eggs, one teacupful of sugar, one teacupful of water, two tablespoonsful of corn starch; mix all together; set the dish in boiling water; keep boiling till it thickens.

For Cooking Cucumbers.—Peel and slice lengthwise, salt and pepper and roll them in flour; lard and butter in your skillet, let it get hot, but not scorched, and fry very brown.

Lemon Custard Cake.—Four cupsful of flour, six eggs, two cupsful of sugar, one teaspoonful of cream of tartar, one teaspoonful of soda, one cupful of butter, one cupful of milk; bake same as a jelly cake; put custard between each layer.

How to Dry Citron.—First pare and cut them in pieces half an inch square; then put two pounds of sugar to one of citron, and jar, and let stand over night, and next morning put on all together and simmer until thoroughly preserved and boiled down quite thick. Take out in pieces to dry in the oven, turning them often.

Tomato Catsup.—To every gallon of tomatoes put four tablespoons of salt, four of black pepper, one of cayenne pepper, three of mustard, half a tablespoonful of ground cloves, and the same of allspice. After having washed and cut up the tomatoes, boil them about twenty minutes, then strain them and add the spice, and simmer the whole together slowly three hours; then bottle and seal.

Card Basket.—Take one dozen large pine cones, varnish, and lay away to dry; take the same number of small ones and treat in the same manner. When they are dry take the bottom of a snuff box and glue on the large cones, gluing them together, at the same time, letting the basket get wider at the top. Take the small cones, place them at the bottom on the outside between the large ones, and the basket is complete.

—Peach Shortcake.—Make first a shortcake of two pounds of sifted flour and a pinch of salt, with four teaspoonsful of cream of tartar and half a teacupful of butter, well mixed through; then add one pint of milk with two teaspoonsful of soda thoroughly dissolved. The softer it is wet up the better, just so you can roll it out into sheets (three, if you like), and place in the pans—bake very quickly. Have ready a quart bowl full of soft peaches, cut up very thin, and thoroughly mixed with white sugar so they will be juicy. After the cake is baked slip it out of the pan; open it evenly with a large knife, butter and sugar both sides, spread over the peaches with the juice and lay on the top crust; spread another layer of peaches on top if you prefer.

Recipe for Pickles.—For 200 pickles of ordinary size take two gallons of cider vinegar, or enough to cover them; one ounce of whole cloves, one ounce of allspice, two ounces of mustard seed, two ounces of alum, six ounces of horse-radish, and one half pint of salt; put all together and heat in a brass or glazed kettle to near a boiling point, and pour it on the washed cucumbers; cover them with cabbage leaves, and put on a weight to keep them down. If they do not look green enough in two or three weeks, pour the vinegar off, heat it, and return it. Heat a third time, if necessary, to make the pickles green enough. To prevent a white scum on the vinegar, put a flannel cloth over the pickles. Thus prepared they will keep a year or more.

How Truffles Did It.

I returned to Ashville after an absence of three years and found my friend Truffles grown fat and jovial, his face the very mirror of peace and self-satisfaction. Truffles was the village baker, and he was like this when I went away.

"Truffles," said I, "how is it? You have improved."

"Improved! How?"

"Why, in every way. What have you been doing?"

Just then a little girl came in with a tattered shawl and barefooted, to whom Truffles gave a loaf of bread. "Oh, dear, Mr. Truffles," the child said with brimming eyes, as she took the loaf of bread; "mamma is getting better, and she says she ows so much to you. She blesses you indeed she does."

"That's one of the things I've been doing," he said after the child had gone.

"You are giving the suffering family bread?" I queried.

"Yes."

"Have you any more cases like that?"

"Yes, three or four of them. I give them a loaf a day enough to feed them."

"And you take no pay?"

"Not from them,"

"Ah! from the town?"

"No; here," said Truffles, laying his hand on his breast. "I'll tell you," he added, smiling, "One day, over a year ago, a poor woman came to me and asked a loaf of bread, which she could not pay for—she wanted it for her poor suffering children. At first I hesitated, but finally I gave it to her, and as her blessing rang in my ears after she had gone, I felt my heart grow warm. Times were hard, and there was a good deal of suffering, and I found myself wishing, by and by, that I could afford to give away more bread. At length an idea struck me. I'd stop drinking, and give that amount away in bread, adding one or two loaves on my own account. I did it, and its been a blessing to me. My shop has grown bigger, and I've grown better every way. My sleep is sound and sweet, and my dreams are pleasant. And that's what you see, I suppose."

A LONG TROT.—"And that's a blessed baby," remarked one woman to another in a street car yesterday.

"Yes, he is, but he's dreadful oneasy."

"Ailing?"

"Wuss nor ailing—he's most sick. He began at eight o'clock last night, and for thirty-four hours by the clock, or till just at daybreak, I had to trot him on my knee and keep singing: Yum-yum—high-dum."—Free Press.

A NEW KIND—"Yes, sir," promptly replied the boy as the grocer asked him if he wanted anything. "I want two ounces of ki and two ounces of pepper."

"Ki? Ki?" queried the astonished man.

"Yes, sir; mother told me to get ki and pepper here and some corset-strings on the corner."

It was a good while before the grocer got hold of the right article.—Free Press.

—It is hard to tell which will bring the most pleasant expression in a woman's face—to tell her that her baby is heavy or her bread is light.

—Paper vest fronts are out, and that's only fair. If the women have paper bustles back, why shouldn't the men have a paper vest front.

I am Dying, Egypt, Dying.

I am dying, Egypt, dying!
Ebbs the crimson life-tide fast,
And the dark Plutonian shadows
Gather on the evening blast.
Let thine arms, Oh! Queen, support me,
Hush thy sobs and bow thine ear,
Listen to the great heart-secrets
Thou, and thou alone, must hear.

Though my scarred and veteran legions
Bear their eagles high no more,
Though my wrecked and shattered galleys
Strew dark Actium's fatal shore;
Though no glittering guards surround me,
Prompt to do their master's will,
I will perish like a Roman,
Die the great Triumvir still.

Let not Cæsar's servile minions
Mock the Lion thus laid low;
'Twas no foeman's hand that slew him,
'Twas his own that struck the blow.
Here, then, pillow on thy bosom,
Ere his star fades fast away,
Him who, drunk with thy caresses,
Madly threw a world away.

Should the base plebeian rabble
Dare assail my fame at Rome,
Where the noble spouse, Octavia,
Weeps within her widowed home—
Seek her; say the gods have told me
Altars, augurs, circling wings, ;
That her blood with mine commingled
Yet shall mount the throne of kings.

As for thee, star-eyed Egyptian,
Glorious sorceress of the Nile,
Light the path of Stygian horrors
With the splendors of thy smile.
Give to Cæsar crowns and arches—
Let his brow the laurels twine,
I can scorn the Senate's triumphs,
Triumphing in love like thine.

I am dying! Egypt, dying!
Hark! the insulting foeman's cry!
They are coming! quick, my falchion,
Let me meet them ere I die!
Ah! no more amid the battle,
Shall his heart exultant swell,
Isis and Osiris guard thee—
Cleopatra! Rome! farewell.

LADIES' COLUMN.

LOWER SKIRTS.

The lower skirts of dresses have the same number of gored breadths as those now worn. Their fulness is entirely confined to the back. The three front breadths are sewed plainly to the belt, while the three back breadths form an immense triple pleat, with the pleats turned toward the middle of the back, and sewed flatly half a yard below the belt. Strings underneath, sewed to the second side seams, are tied behind to keep the sides and front smooth. The trimmings around the bottom are alike all around, and are made up of knife pleatings, puffs, and gathered ruffles.

OVER-SKIRTS.

It is in over-skirts that the greatest change is shown. They are still long and clinging, but are draped differently on the sides, and are so narrow that bustles cannot be worn with them; indeed, bustles are entirely abandoned in Paris. The front is a close apron, often wrinkled in careless-looking folds; a row of buttons and button-holes is down the left side, while the right has square corners below, and the top drapery is held by a pocket that seems to be suspended from the waist, and has loops and ends below that catch up the back of the over-skirt. Some of those pockets are very large, three-cornered, and are drawn together at the top by an elastic band; others are many-sided and flat.

NEW POLONAISES.

The new polonaises buttoned behind are very graceful garments that show a fine figure to advantage, yet merchants say they will be worn only by young ladies and those who adopt extreme fashions. They give the costume something of the chatelaine and princesse appearance. The front is of the princesse shape, the right side is caught up by a large chatelaine pocket, and the back has the Marguerite forms elaborately draped and buttoned down the middle. One such costume is of plumb-colored brocaded wool and silk. The brocaded polonaise has a deep apron, edged with wide netted fringe while the back has five silk folds upon it. The pocket on the right is a three-corner bag, nearly half a yard deep, trimmed with large, long-looped bows, and suspended by bands of silk that begin in the front and back near the waist. The brocaded sleeve opens over one of plain silk. Lower skirts of silk, trimmed with puffs and pleatings.

THE GREEK STYLE OF HAIR-DRESSING.

Speaking of the Greek style of wearing the hair a correspondent says: Scarcely one American woman out of ten thousand has a head and face of classic mould, and nothing can be more trying to piquant faces, pug noses, and heads on which one "bump" is developed at the expense of another, than just this style of wearing the hair. It takes away all the piquancy with which nature makes up for the want of regular features, and transforms the saucy beauty into a demure-looking Quackeress. For this reason, notwithstanding its convenience, we predict that it will not be universally adopted, nor long popular.

JENNY LIND.

Jenny Lind, as she appeared at a party recently in London, is thus described: "She dressed her hair in presisely the same style as when in America twenty-five years ago. It is but slightly tinged with frost, and is nearly as full and flowing as of yore. Age has more particularly left its imprint in the shape of crows-feet on her chin and neck, and at the corners of her eyes and mouth. She has the same blended expression of firmness and sweetness of temper, the same winning smile, and the same simplicity of behavior. She was dressed in a dark ash-colored silk, with a rich India shawl thrown loosely over her shoulders. On her head was a small straw hat bearing a short white plume. She was accompanied by her husband and two lovely daughters, aged about eighteen and twenty, looking very much as their gifted mother did at their age. Mr. Goldschmidt shows the effect of age and study, his head being bald and shining."

FRENCH BEAUTY.

On the much discussed question of feminine beauty in France, a well known writer delivers his opinion: The French woman's face is as handsome as that of any other in Europe, and fades more slowly. At forty she glides into an embonpoint, with an unwrinkled face and a good complexion—at the age when the English woman becomes heavy-necked and frowsy, and the American pale and wrinkled. The climate has something to do with this, but doubtless her nourishing food, generous wine, and out-of-door air much more. Her mode of living contributes thereto—the exercise and developement of each function in a more natural and sensuous manner than with us. There are ascetic ideas in America which have a tendency to retard the physical development of women, for mind moulds matter. The American has more intellect than her French sister, but the latter has softness where she has prettiness. There is nervous excitability and cleverness in one, mellowness and equality of character in the other. The forced, brilliant vitality of women in America is subject to fits of reaction, for nature has its limits. In the French woman the mind is more even and cheerful, and in the absence of exhaustive and irregular demands made upon it the uniform health is better.

With this issue we begin the pre-payment of the postage of THE BEAVER, *the subscription price of which will hereafter be $1.20 per year, postage prepaid. CONSPIRACY.

The same spirit which moved RICHARD II. as indicated in his remark "Plots have I laid, inductions dangerous," seems to prevail to a sad extent at the present time. Our Western exchanges inform us that a few days ago, three women and a girl, ten years old, were arrested—in Lincoln County, charged with having conspired to convict one MATTHIAS KONKLE of rape committed upon the person of the little girl; he received the death sentence which was afterwards commuted to imprisonment for life in the penitentiary, where he has been confined since last April. The little girl has turned Queen's evidence, and was consequently discharged from custody, and gave evidence before the Police Magistrate at St. Catharines to the effect that Mrs. KONKLE, the mother or stepmother—which does not appear—of the convict, and wife of Col. KONKLE, an old and highly respected citizen, who had disposed of his property to his sons, was anxious to receive her dower but could not because "MATTHIAS was in the way." In order to become rid of him, she called to her evil council her washerwoman, and, with the assistance of a servant-girl, who afterward confessed that "it was all a plot and she took part in it for fun," they concocted the fearful charge of rape against young KONKLE. The old washerwoman in consideration of "something handsome," promised her by Mrs. KONKLE, performed such brutalities upon the little girl as would give color to the fiendish charge, and so successful was the plot that the young man was condemned to the penitentiary. Words are faint to express the depravity and deliberation of deviltry involved in the case. The country wherein such a crime can be perpetrated, must blush to own that barbarism is extant to such a degree in the midst of its boasted civilization. Nor is Lincoln County the only one in which such conspiracies are elaborated. In our own county and at the last Assizes, were developed the facts of a case of as signal enormity as that mentioned above, although it had not even the stimulus of pecuniary advantage to urge its diabolical developement. We allude to the O'ROURKE-HART rape-perjury case, in which we rejoice to see that summary justice or rather punishment has been visited upon the guilty parties, as is likely to be done in the Lincoln conspiracy, for the parties to the latter are now under trial. We hope, however that a more adequate penalty will be inflicted in case of guilt being proven, than was imposed upon the O'ROURKE family. We say this advisedly, without wishing to impugn the motives of Mr. Justice GALT, who pronounced the sentence, still we must say that judging from the very strong terms used by his Lordship in his opening charge to the Grand Jury, in alluding to the case, we expected that a sentence a little more severe than two years in the Penitentiary would hardly have been deemed too harsh a punishment upon the parties to a diabolical conspiracy, which, if it had been successfully carried into execution, would have subjected the objects thereof to punishment, varying in severity from death to, at the least, seven years penal servitude. Some fearful examples are needed to deter depravity from pursuing its evil bent with comparative impunity.

A NEW ASPECT OF LIFE ASSURANCE.

The idea of a business contract presupposes the existence of a mutually beneficial arrangement, and any pecuniary consideration advanced involves a quid pro quo. Accepting this as correct, the relations of Life Assurance Companies and their policy-holders, are of rather an anomalous character. This comparatively new aspect of the subject was brought prominently into notice at the sixth annual convention of the State Superintendents of Indiana, held in New York. A Mr. FINCH, in discussing this view of the question, said that

"The contract for life insurance is the most one-sided known in business. It is framed by the best skill one can engage, so as to give immunity to the one and hold the other with the utmost strictness. The agents and solicitors on one side, who present and urge the contract, have the opportunity to know all the parts of the contract, and are skilled in presenting everything plausible; the other is a stranger to it in every part, and can know nothing of it more than what the agent or solicitor says. In the continuance of the contract the convenience, discretion, and judgment of one side only is consulted. If the other does not like anything done, or from any cause is unable to continue paying as he began, he can quit, but in quitting he is liable to lose everything he has paid, and at best is only able to secure what is granted by the sole, uncontrolled, and supreme will of the one side." He also directed attention to the fact that the policies of assurance companies deal very charily with question of the "payment of dividends; or if dividends are mentioned, it is simply mentioned; the method of calculating or the manner of paying is never expressed. The surplus is only mentioned to say that it is confiscated, should the policy on any account be forfeited. There is the element of uncertainty in the policy, in this and many other respects, which cannot be found in a contract where the interests of each party to it have been equally consulted."

He pointed out further that "every syllable that the one who signs an application says concerning himself, whether it be material or immaterial, affecting him as a risk favorably or unfavorably, must be strictly true or the policy will be void."

From these and equally cogent reasons, Mr. FINCH feels justified in pronouncing Life Assurance contracts eminently one-sided and unjust.

To show that he is not a mere querulous malcontent, Mr. FINCH suggests conditions which in his opinion are of a nature to remedy this state of things complained of, which, without pronouncing upon, we submit for the careful consideration of parties interested in the subject:

"1. All life policies should be non-forfeitable.

"2. Life insurance companies should be held to make good the promises and representations of their agents and solicitors concerning the policy and practice of the company.

"3. The principal caveat emptor should be applied to the insurance companies. Upon this principle all other contracts are made. It is applied in all its vigour by the company to the policy holder; let it be applied equally to the companies. Let the purchaser beware, says the law; let life insurance companies do likewise.

"4. There should be no defence permitted for any misstatement in the application after five annual payments, whether it be made fraudulently or not. A fraud that cannot be discovered in such case in five years cannot be very damaging. If a policy-holder commit suicide while sane, the policy should be void; and all premiums received by the company, with accrued interest, should be refunded, but no more should be refunded than the principal sum named in the policy, and the accumulation thereon.

"5. If a company defends against a payment and judgment is adverse to it, the judgment should be for the principal sum named in the policy and the accumulations thereon, and ten per cent. interest on the total sum from the time payment was demanded. The judgment should also include the attorney's fees of the plaintiff, and all expenses incurred in making the defence.

"If these requirements are enforced by legislation, a life insurance policy will be a policy of insurance, a safety, a security, a much sought and valuable way of providing against the uncertainties of life. It will thus be what at present is not."

The address of his Lordship to the Grand Jury was as follows:

Gentlemen of the Grand Jury:

I am happy to inform you that there are few cases on the calendar, although I regret to see that some of these are of a serious nature. One case will come under your consideration, about which I happen to know something myself, for it came under my notice in Toronto on an application for bail for the prisoners charged therewith, which I considered a proper case for admission to bail. After bail was allowed, a charge of perjury was made against the female and her witnesses, and they were committed. It is an extraordinary coincidence, and I don't recollect that a similar one ever came under my observation, in which at the same assizes a charge of rape has been brought and a counter charge of perjury against the prosecuting parties. The crime of rape is one of a very serious nature, involving a death penalty which the court has power to mitigate, an imprisonment of seven years being the extent of the mitigation. The charge of perjury in this case is one of peculiar heinousness, its object having been the conviction of the accused of a crime which, if proven, would subject the parties to the death penalty, or a long term of imprisonment. The charge of wounding with intent to do grievious bodily harm, presents three different aspects—that of felony, that of unlawful wounding, and the other as a simple assault. There is one case of larceny, in which the prisoner will be brought before you. In respect to the charge of misplacing a switch on the railway, there is said to be the plea of insanity. With that you have nothing to do; it is your duty to return a bill, or no bill, as the case may be. There is very little civil business, and you will not be detained long.

CIVIL BUSINESS.

HENRY vs. ROBLIN.—An action for ejectment, to recover possession of Lot No. 7, North side of Dundas street, Napanee. Verdict for plaintiff. E. J. Hooper for plaintiff; no defence.

MERCHANTS' BANK vs. LOTT, et al.—Action for ejectment, to recover possession of a steam saw mill in Western Napanee, known as the Stevenson Mill. Verdict for plaintiff. Reeve & Morden for plaintiff; no defence.

DOWNEY & BROS. vs. PATTERSON.—This case was an action for damages, which had been laid over from last Assizes, on account of the illness of defendant, and arose from the collision of the plaintiff's and defendant's vessels on the bay. Verdict for defendant. Reeve & Morden for plaintiffs; W. H. R. Allison for defendant.

CRIMINAL BUSINESS.

THE QUEEN vs. HENRY HART, PETER HART, AND GEO. KINKLEY.—Defendants were charged with committing a rape upon the person of Barbara Ann O'Rourke. Mrs. O'Rourke and her husband having confessed that the charge was maliciously concocted, the Harts were formally discharged by the Grand Jury.

THE QUEEN vs. MICHAEL O'ROURKE, sr., MICHAEL O'ROURKE, jr., and BARBARA ANN O'ROURKE—Perjury. The Grand Jury found a true bill. Michael O'Rourke, jr., and his wife pleaded guilty to the indictment when arraigned, but Michael O'Rourke, sr., was game and stood his trial. The jury returned a verdict of guilty.

THE QUEEN vs. OLIVER URQUHART.—Feloniously displacing a switch on G. T. R. The prisoner was acquitted on the ground of insanity, and by order of the Court was committed to jail to await the pleasure of His Honor the Lieut-Governor of Ontario, in the matter.

QUEEN vs. ISAAC MARKLAND.—Murder; true bill. The prisoner on being arraigned, pleaded not guilty, and owing to the late hour at which he was arrested, was not ready, for trial therefore he will remain in gaol till the next assizes, the witnesses being bound over, to appear.

QUEEN vs. ELIZABETH WILLIAMS.—Murder; true bill. The prisoner was not tried, she having sworn that the child she was accused of murdering, was delivered to Markland, who promised to take care of it; if tried and found guilty she would have been sentenced to death. On the other hand, being a witness in the Markland charge of murder, it would not answer to set her free, for when Markland's trial came on she might not be found.

In the case of the Queen vs. Michael O'Rourke, sr., for perjury, a verdict of guilty was returned, and he was sentenced to six months' imprisonment in the common gaol at hard labor.

Michael O'Rourke and his wife Barbara Ann, having pleaded guilty to the charge of perjury, arising out of the Hart affair, were sentenced each to two years' in the Provincial Penitentiary.

The following is the presentment of the Grand Jury:

To the Honorable Mr. Justice Galt:

We, the Grand Jury of the Court of Oyer and Terminer and general jail delivery for the County of Lennox and Addington beg most respectfully to make the following presentment: we deem it a matter of congratulation that our county although a large one, is comparatively free from crime as indicated by the few cases that have come before us. In the investigation of one of the cases we have been most painfully impressed with the fact that the awful crime of perjury is too frequently not regarded with that horror and detestation which its enormity should inspire. Believing that this and other crimes, flow from a want of proper education in youth and think it highly desirable that the law regarding the compulsory attendance of children at school should be enforced. On a careful inspection of the jail and outpremises we found them both in a condition most creditable to those in charge. The prisoners had no complaints to make. We regret to say that no facilities are provided for the mental improvement of the inmates and we would respectfully recommend the County Council to provide a library of suitable books, the reading which we deem [illegible] of those confined. In concluding we [illegible] the officers of the court.

J. N. LAPUM, Foreman.

Truth Will Out.

A story with many morals comes from Windsor, Conn. Forty years ago there was a bank in Windsor. One morning the cashier opened the locked vaults and found everything in order, including an envelope that held the evening before $50,000, but the money was gone. Detectives were summoned. They struck what they thought to be a trail, and followed it straight to the house of Thos. Emerson, the President of the bank. The evidence against him was wholly circumstantial, but it seemed pretty clear. Within a few short weeks, Emerson exchanged his home at Windsor for a cell at Weathersfield, one of the 4 x 9 cells in which Connecticut used to starve as well as suffocate her felons. The ex-president lived several years among the gloomy stone walls, and then came out to find himself an outcast hated by the plundered populace which had once honored him. He lived to be an old man; but his crime was never forgotten, and he went down to the grave with "Thief" stamped upon him. The verdict was on record; every one knew of it. His feeble protests were vain to shake the settled conviction of his sin. Years after the grass grew over his body a chance stroke of a workman's hammer proved his innocence and showed that he had been one of the many victims of circumstantial evidence. The cashier of the bank, the man who discovered the theft, died about the same time the ex-convict did. The odor of sanctity hung about him. His memory was cherished at Windsor as that of a truly good man. In an evil moment of his memory the present occupant of his old house decided to have it repaired. While the carpenters were at work, on Monday of last week, a misdirected blow with a hammer sunk the head of that tool into a secret cavity in a wall. A moment's investigation showed that the hiding place held the money stolen from the Windsor Bank forty years ago. Unless circumstantial evidence is again playing tricks with the truth, the cashier stole the money, hid it, allowed a perfectly innocent man to drag out his life with the terrible curse of a conviction for felony resting on him, and was afraid to use the money for the sake of which he bartered his soul. The Springfield Republican says that there is "quite a sensation" in Windsor on account of the revelation. The fact is not surprising.—Chicago Paper.

Terrible Charge Against an Ecclesiastic.

Detective Lafon arrested the Abbe Joseph Chabert, Professor and Director of the National Institute of Fine Arts applied to Industry, on a charge of rape, preferred against him by Wilhelmina Josephine Beauchamp. Miss Beauchamp made a deposition before Mr. L. A. Tetu, J. P., to the effect that the accused, Joseph Chabert, did on or about the 10th day of June last, in his rooms on St. James street, commit a criminal assault, and effected a rape upon her person, without her consent. The prisoner was brought before the Police Magistrate this afternoon, and committed to jail for further examination.

The prosecutor, who is enciente, is a young girl of not quite fifteen years of age. She is French, and not particularly comely in appearance. She knows the prisoner, and says that he enticed her into his rooms, where he accomplished his purpose. Her long silence on the subject of the offence is remarkable, the more as she is under the care of her responsible guardian, her father. It seems extraordinary that nothing should have been heard, in any way, of the alleged crime until near four months have elapsed since it is stated to have been committed, and it is surmised that a feeling of revenge has actuated her or her advisers in the matter. But that as it may, the Abbe Chabert is now in prison, and on Monday will be again brought before the Police Magistrate. Bail was refused by Mr. Brehaut.—Montreal Star.

THE STORM IN ENGLAND.—Further accounts from the North show that great damage has been done by the storm. At Manchester, a large mill was prostrated by the gale and the falling walls crushed into the adjacent buildings, causing great destruction of property, but no loss of life. Many vessels broke adrift in the Frith of Forth, on the Tyne, at Shields and the Mersey. Numerous casualties are reported. Eight of the crew of the Southland were drowned by the capsizing of a life-boat which went to her assistance. [illegible] The damage by the storm in Liverpool is [illegible].

Brutal Murder.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 25.—The Gazette's Bellefontaine, Ohio, special says: Yesterday Miss Laughton, a young lady of sixteen, accompanied a man named Schell and wife on an excursion to the reservoir several miles distant. Mrs. Schell being fatigued, was left with the team, and Schell with the young lady started after wild plums. Schell returned without Miss Laughton, stating that she had strayed from him and he could not find her. The alarm was given and search made, resulting in finding the body of the young lady this noon, nearly nude, throat cut from ear to ear, and the grass showing that a terrible struggle had occurred. Schell, though suspected, was not arrested till this afternoon, and upon examination a bloody knife was found in his pocket. He is now under arrest, with a heavy guard around him to protect him from the excited people.

CINCINNATI, 24.—The Gazette's Bellefontaine special says Mrs. Schell, wife of the man arrested yesterday for the murder of Miss Laughton near Belle Centre on Thursday, was arrested and testified before the coroner to-day that her husband had told her that he intended to ravish Miss Laughton and kill her afterwards; that their ride on Thursday was planned for that purpose, and that her husband threatened to kill her if she followed him when he went into the bushes with Miss Laughton. She says he returned in about two hours stating that Miss Laughton fought so hard he did not succeed in ravishing her, although after he had stabbed her she said, "Don't kill me, Jim. I won't resist any more." But he feared she would tell and so killed her, threatening also to kill his wife if she told of it. Mrs Schell also testified to other crimes committed by her husband. The affair causes the most intense excitement. The sheriff has summoned a strong posse who are guarding the jail, but trouble is expected before morning.

LATER—THE MURDERER LYNCHED.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 24.—About 300 men attacked the jail at Bellefontaine about half-past twelve to-night, battered down the doors, dragged Schell out and hanged him to a tree. The guards made no resistance. Schell protested his innocence of the crime.

Judicial Appointments.

The following gentlemen have been appointed to the Supreme Court:

From Ontario:
Chief Justice Richards.
Mr. Justice Strong.
From Quebec:
Hon. T. Fournier, Q. C.
Mr. Justice Taschereau.
From New Brunswick:
Chief Justice Ritchie.
From Nova Scotia:
Hon. Wm. Henry, Q. C.

The gentleman whose name stands first will be Chief Justice of the new Court. The vacancies of the Court of Error and Appeal and in the Court of Queen's Bench, caused by the promotion of Mr. Richard and Mr. Strong, will be filled by Mr. R. A. Harrison and Mr. Thos. Moss. The Postmaster-Generalship of the Dominion will be vacant on the retirement of Mr. Fournier, as also the representation of Bellechasse in the Commons. West Toronto will be vacant on the resignation of Mr. Moss in the Commons.

Provincial Exhibition.

The Provincial Exhibition has been safely concluded at Ottawa, having passed off in a manner very satisfactory to the people of the Eastern section of Ontario. In the number of entries, and in the amount of gate money, it was not so successful as the Western shows generally are, but it was quite as successful as was expected. The demand of the Eastern people has not been satisfied; they have had the fair and exhibited the products. Holding the Provincial Fair at Ottawa will be chiefly valuable to the local sight-seers, many of whom have last week seen for the first time the best stock, manufactures, etc., of the western countries. The Ottawa valley is by no means the poorest part of Canada, and it is capable of great improvement. Ideas have been carried there, through the medium of the show, which will terminate in improved agriculture and added wealth.

Mixing Barley.

Gibbs Brothers, of Oshawa, write as follows to the Vindicator, on a subject of importance to our farmers: "We desire to call the attention of farmers and others to the absolute necessity of keeping the different qualities of barley separate. There is now so much two-rowed barley grown, that if mixed with the four rowed as in former years, the barley from this section of the country, in the United States market, will no longer be sustained. Mixing destroys it for the malster, and we are advised that if so sent to the market, it will be rejected, and can only be sold at a large deduction from the highest price."

—Remember the Grand Opening and Exposition of Fall and winter millinery, Ladies' and Children's furs, silks and velvet, on Saturday, October 2d, afternoon and evening, at E. Hooper & Sons'.

REVIVAL OF TRADE.

Providence has favored us with a rich and abundant harvest, and with the highly remunerative prices which are offered for farm products of every kind, we may confidently expect a considerable revival in the business of the country during the next few weeks. Already the farmer's heart begins to sing. The late spring which perplexed him so much and produced such fearful forebodings a few months ago has been almost forgotten. The long drought of May and June, which at one time appeared so threatening has also almost passed from remembrance. Here and there one has got his barley tarnished a little by an inopportune shower, but the bulk of that important cereal has been gathered in good order—plump and heavy, bright and beautiful.

The merchant and manufacturer begin to feel the same buoyancy of spirit which is experienced by the tiller of the soil. Men who have for months past been in a trembling state of anxiety in respect to their business, are beginning to take heart and look hopefully to the future. Thoughtful ladies who felt keenly the necessity of very decided retrenchment in household expenditure are venturing upon new hats and dresses. The streets look gayer, picnics and parties begin to multiply, courtship and marriages seem to be promoted, bachelors and widowers who who did not dare to assume the responsibilities of housekeeping during the existence of the hard times begin to take heart, and are wisely taking to themselves wives.

In the midst of all this enjoyment why should our friend Russell of the Travelers Life Insurance Company be overlooked, why should not his heart too have cause to dance for joy? If the farmer and the merchant, the manufacturer and tradesman can serve themselves and at the same time gladden their neighbor, why should they not do it? Mr. Russell is agent for one of the very soundest and best institutions of the kind on the continent or in the world. None in fact offer, as we believe, all things being taken into consideration, equal advantages with it. Time and space will not allow us to illustrate this observation at present but we believe it to be susceptible of the easiest and the most convincing illustration; and fancy if anyone will just take the trouble to call at Mr. Russell's office, over Coxall and Paisley's he will soon be convinced of this. Now a policy in such a Company—a company just as safe as the Bank of England—is one of the very safest and best investments. The sense of security which it will inspire in respect to the interest of your family will more than repay you for the sacrifice which it will involve. Try it and if it does not prove so, we are no prophet—that's all.

Accident.

Last week Mrs. Hayes, of Thomas street, better known as "Granny," fell on the pavement on Centre street, and broke her forearm in two places.

New Business.

We direct attention to the advertisement in another column of Mr. A Smith, Mill Point, who has opened out a general store in the Goodmurphy Brick Block.

Coming.

A traveller from the west informs us that a trio of beautiful sorceresses, or sybils, or clairvoyants, or somnambulistic second-sightists, or cataleptics or something similar, are coming east on a provincial tour, and may be expected in this place shortly, when the talented sisters will be happy to see professionally any young man who parts his hair in the middle, or shows other signs of being easily gulled. Magna est humbug et prevalebit.

Virtue Rewarded.

It is pleasant to note that Chas. James, Esq., J. P., finds leisure amidst the discharge of the more serious duties of his position to cultivate the muses. For the last twenty years he has conducted the musical portion of the services in the C. M. church choir in this place, to the general satisfaction, during which time he learned that virtue is its own reward. Recently he resigned the baton to younger hands and the members of the choir presented him with a handsome photographic group of themselves, elegantly framed, and afterwards stood the oysters at Jamieson's restaurant.

Mechanics' Institute.

A fair representation of our citizens attended at the town hall on Monday night last, to take into consideration the organization of a Mechanics' Institute. The meeting was brought to order by calling A. L. Morden, Esq., to the chair. Mr. Fred. Burrowes, in explanation of the organization and operation of such institutions, read the act relating to them. The meeting was unanimous in favor of the organization of such an institution, a step towards which was made by electing A. L. Morden, Esq., President. A subscription book was opened and over $40 subscribed, and a committee appointed to solicit subscriptions in the town in aid of the funds of the Institute.

Napanee at the Provincial Exhibition

It is with great pleasure that we call attention to the following extract from the Ottawa Citizen in reference to the exhibit of furniture made by Messrs. Gibbard & Son, of this place. They took second prize on the bedroom set, which was sold on the spot:

"Messrs. Gibbard & Son, of Napanee, make a fine display of furniture. They have a magnificent black walnut bed-room set, which is valued at $400. The bedstead is [illegible] in style, beautifully mounted with French walnut panel. The dressing case, commode and wash-stand are of the same style as the bedstead, with the addition of marble tops. The dressing case is an imposing piece of furniture, the pier glass being five feet high, and the whole stand ten feet. It is handsomely trimmed with gold, and has gold [illegible] handles. The whole set is elegant in design, and has a very rich and substantial appearance. This firm have one of the largest furniture warerooms in the Dominion, and keep constantly in stock an extensive assortment of everything in their line. They were recently burned out, and have just completed a new factory, in which they have placed the newest and best machinery that can be obtained. The firm is one of long standing, and Mr. J. Gibbard, the senior partner, has been in the business at Napanee since 1845. They have always carried on a very large business, both wholesale and retail, and their reputation for first class work is thoroughly established in all parts of the Province. Yesterday Messrs. Gibbard & Son's display was a great centre of attraction, and all who visited the spot expressed their admiration."

Complimentary Tea-Meeting.

A tea-meeting in honor of the Rev. John Scott was held last Tuesday evening, at which were present about 300 persons. After refreshments had been served, speeches were made. Rev. Mr. Blackstock delivered an eloquent and feeling speech. Rev. Mr. Leitch, of Centreville, followed in a few remarks. Rev. Bidwell Lane made some eloquent and very appropriate remarks, followed by Rev. Mr. Schuster, after which an address was presented, accompanied with a purse containing $225, which with the presents from other portions of his pastorate, makes a sum of $700, given in recognition of the high estimate in which Rev. Mr. Scott is held by those under his charge. In response to the address the rev. gentleman made an appropriate and feeling reply. Many were the eyes that were suffused with tears during its delivery. We believe the course of the Rev. Mr. Scott is first Toronto, then London, and finally South Africa, to engage in missionary work. The prayers of his flock follow him to his new field of labor. Below is the full text of the address:

Address to the Rev. John Scott, from the first Presbyterian Church of Napanee.

REVEREND AND DEAR SIR,

After many years of pleasant intercourse with you in your public capacity as Pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Napanee, We have met here to-night, on the eve of your departure from among us, to express to you in some what our sincere regret at parting with a citizen who has always proved himself to be the friend of the poor and the needy, and a pastor excelling in acts of kindness, "rightly dividing the word of truth" to the people of his charge, and diligently aiding in every work calculated to further the cause of Christ and humanity, and whose exemplary Christian spirit and conduct have commended and endeared him to all classes as well as to the congregation over which he has presided.

When we take a retrospect of the past, and consider that for seventeen years you have been the pastor of our homes and of our hearts, that you have been near us in sickness and in health, sharing with us our joys and our sorrows, and ministering alike your kind offices to the rich, the poor, and the stranger; striving on all occasions to guide and direct us to the Great Giver of all good, we must acknowledge that we have come far short of our duty to you as a Servant of the Divine Master.

Taking into consideration the many disadvantages which you have labored under, we feel thankful to the Great Head of the Church for the good work which he has enabled you to do in this place. On your advent here you found a congregation feeble and struggling, but by able and faithful labor you have raised it to comparative strength if not to actual independence.

Your resigning the pastorate of an attached people is a sacrifice laid on the altar of union, that illustrates the unselfishness peculiar to Christianity, and cannot fail of its reward; and in response to the feeling in which you have tendered and pressed your resignation, we feel called upon to make some endeavor to act towards you in a generous spirit, such as will be worthy of Christian Brethern whom the Lord has favored with temporal as well as spiritual blessings.

And now, Rev. and Dear Sir, please accept this memorial purse, the offering and contributions of a grateful people, as a small token of the esteem in which you are held by all denominations as a Christain Minister, a kind and generous friend, and a good citizen.

We your hearers, once more beg leave to express to you our heartfelt sorrow at parting with one who by his long and faithful labors while among us has helped to sooth our sorrows and increase our joys, and be assured that we still have the fullest confidence in you as a true Servant of Christ and a kind Christian pastor; and that wherever you may be called to labor in his cause your memory will still be cherished by us—your kind ministrations will not be forgotten, and your good works will follow you wherever your lot may be cast.

May He whose devoted Servant you have abundantly proved yourself to be, guide, bless and comfort you and your companion in life—may you be blessed in your family and in your store, and when time and time's things shall have passed away may it be our happy lot to meet in that blest abode where congregations never break up, and Sabbaths have no end. Farewell!

—Our worsted coatings are going lively.
Spencer & Hogan.

Corrections.

It appears that Mr. Grant is building a private residence upon Unger's Island, near Mill Point, instead of a summer resort, for which it is a very handsome site.

Mr. Goodmurphy sold his brick block for $4,000, not $400.

Our Markets.

Are well supplied with produce of all kinds which generally command fair prices as seen by our market reports, which we correct weekly. Grain is moving rather slowly at present. Some farmers are holding to their barley, waiting for the almighty dollar per bushel. We cannot see any very good grounds for anticipating a much higher price, considering the quotations in Oswego and New York, for with the present discount on greenbacks, say 15 per cent., then 15 cents duty, 3 cents freight, 3 cents for handling, 1 cent for insurance and elevating, and only selling in Oswego at $1.18 to $1.20, will leave a very small margin of profit for our buyers, who have been paying 85 cents for No. 1 for some time past. We have no direct interest in the matter, more than the benefit of our patrons. If we had barley to sell, we think we would not hold it another day. Wheat, in consequence of the favorable reports from Europe in reference to the weather and harvest, is on the decline.

Bigamy

She was black-eyed and beautiful, and had traces of grief on her classic features, although a close observer might have noticed indications of an indomitable purpose in the firm compression of her classically chiselled lip (see G. W. M. Reynold's passim), and the lightning glance of her coal black eye. Last Sunday the morning express from the east brought her, in the capacity of an outraged and deserted wife, to Napanee in search of one who had broken the sacred plight he had given at the hymeneal altar. Last summer and the following winter the faithless benedict, who hailed from the city of Albany, [illegible] in this [illegible] soliciting orders for mortuary [illegible] marble—in fact, he peddled gravestones. Notwithstanding the melancholy nature of his business, he found heart to "woo and marry and a' " a blooming farmer's daughter of Prince Edward, who to her beauty and virtues, added the crowning attraction for Gravestones in the shape of $2,000 solid cash in her stocking. Wife No. 1, not liking his style of off with the old love and on with the new, on hearing of his second matrimonial venture, came hither by express, as detailed above, and proceeding to Prince Edward about three miles from Picton, where wife No. 2 lived, laid information, and procured a warrant for the arrest of Gravestones, on a charge of bigamy. Gravestones is in a close corner, "Two souls with but a single thought," in reference to Gravestone's hair; "Two hearts that beat as one" in their feelings of vengeance towards the too much married man of marble.

O, Give Us a Smoke.

Last Saturday, a weather-beaten looking tar, apparently about three sheets in the wind—a full cargo of the curse of Canada,—meandered into a grocer's shop on Dundas street. In melting tones he told his woes. He was a native of France, had been on a spree, was "dead bust" and hungry, and wanted money to reach Quebec, where he had friends. After enlisting the sympathy of his auditor, he produced an elegant looking meerschaum pipe, for which "I pay fifty franc in la belle France; you shall have him for tree dollar." Struck by the beauty of the "soothing friend," and delighted with the idea of possessing a pipe, from whose seafoam bowl the balmy cloud of fragrant Latakia had floated upon the throbbing air of the Boulevards of Paris, the confiding and tender-hearted grocer, with proper commercial prudence, secured possession of the treasure at a reduced figure, and rejoiced in his gain. But when he found out that poor Jack had a bloated carpet bag full of similar meerschaums, he groaned in spirit and cursed his credulity. This nice little game was successfully played upon several of our sharpest men on Dundas street, and prices varying from $1 to $6 were paid for pipes that wholesale at $3 a dozen. One good looking young man after paying his $6, rushed over to McLeod's and tried to barter his bargain for a "Radiant Home." Notwithstanding all the victims are seasoned smokers, the very thought of that meerschaum pipe makes them sick, although Byron says that Myrtle Navy is

"[illegible] glorious in a pipe
When tipped with amber,mellow, rich and ripe."

Fall Openings.

Croakers have howled about hard times, but they don't seem to affect our merchants, or the latter have long purses or excellent credit. The fall openings on Saturday last should be convincing proof that our merchants are enterprising and successful. To begin with the opening of

MESSRS. A. C. DAVIS AND BRO.:

On entering the door of this establishment, one was struck with the fine vista opened before him. On the right hand were long ranges of shelving, filled to the ceiling with gent.'s furnishing goods, from a one cent paper collar to a $50 overcoat. On the left, the frailer but more beautiful fabrics peculiar to the softer sex, were displayed in brilliant variety. The centre between these departments was fitted with brilliant chandeliers, draped with goods of all descriptions, scarfs and beautiful shawls. The view was closed with the wide and easy grand stairway leading to the carpet, millinery, and tailoring departments. The balustrades were draped in crimson cloth, and the steps beautifully carpeted. Ascending by these, admission is gained to the carpet room, which was very finely decorated, the walls with pictures and hangings of laces, the floor with soft carpets, every width of a different style and material. About the centre of the carpet room is an arch, from the centre of which depended a chandelier, dividing it into two spaces, which were hung with heavy lace curtains, admitting the visitor to the millinery rooms beyond, where the many gorgeous specimens of the milliner's art, the brilliant cardinal red flowers and ribbons (now all the rage), the excited groups of lovely ladies, chatting like a confused council of cherubs, and "trying on" some lovely article of head-gear, made a scene exceedingly trying to the nerves of a bachelor, even when supported by the presence of Mr. Sim. Johnson, who acted as our "guide, counseller and friend" throughout the perilous exploration. Hats and bonnets, plumes and sprays, feathers and filigrees, and—well, we can't describe it all, so let us drop into

MESSRS. R. DOWNEY AND BROS.,

Where on entering, the scene is similar to that just described, only their store is longer and contains, on the first floor, a somewhat different stock of goods, which a cursory examination could give no idea, suffice it to say that it embraces a complete and extensive assortment of staple and fancy dry-goods. We are taken in charge by Mr. B. S. Abrams, under whose courteous escort we ascended to the carpet room, which in its gorgeousness and beauty brought to mind Dumas' descriptions of palatial abodes in the luxurious and voluptuous times of Louis XIV. The walls were hung with tapestry and adorned with beautiful pictures, the floor covered with carpets of soft pile, and brilliant hues, tapestry and ingrain, but the grand scene was the millinery room adjoining. In the centre was a chandelier with many lights, and from its junction with the ceiling extended to the four corners of the room diaphanous garlands of tulle illusion, in depending curves, looped at intervals with knots of brilliant flowers, and from its bottom dropped gracefully a translucent bridal veil, enfoldingin its hazy embrace plumes, wreaths, sprays, sprigs, spangles and all manner of bridal head-gear. Pyramids of beautiful hats and bonnets, some fresh from Paris, gorgeous in cardinal red flowers and ribbons, as a glowing patch of tropic bloom, dazed the bewildered sight. At the south side of the room was raised a bank of flowers, brilliant and beautiful with cardinal red florescence set amid foliage of Hibernian greenness, like the crimson and green of a grove of maple, blushing at the first familiarities of the frost king. From high to low is but a step. Next we enter the tailoring department, which is complete in all material and arrangements for clothing in proper style and tone the human form divine, of the male persuasion, of course. We close this imperfect description of these two openings which were so successful, not alone as a display of goods, but in point of attendance, which, notwithstanding the dreary and drizzling weather, was very large. We predict a successful season for the enterprise which these displays indicate. To-day and to-night E. Hooper & Sons hold their fall opening. Drop in and see it.

—We have to thank those friends who responded to our call for money, and beg to [illegible] those who have not done so that the 1st of October has come and gone. [illegible] settled in full at once we will not be responsible for consequences. We must have money. Call at once, and oblige

Mr. Geo. Lasher has exchanged a farm of 130 acres, in Ernesttown, with Mr. R. A. Wees, for a brick block in Napanee, and $2000.

Mr. Christopher Switzer, of Ernesttown, has purchased Mr. Peter Fraser's farm in Camden, for $5,000.

Accident.

Another accident occurred at Mill Point, on Wednesday last. A young man named Hilliard thought he would take an excursion upon one of the large rubber belts in the saw mill. After a short ride his legs got entangled in the belt and he fell from one belt to another by which the belts were both broken, otherwise he might have been killed. As it was he fortunately escaped with a fall, a sore head and lame legs. Nearly every accident that occurs at those mills is the result of foolish play or carelessness. Parties should take warning and be more careful in future.

Making it "Hot" for Us.

"A PROMPT DENIAL.—We have a letter by Mr. T. F. Jacobs, late band master here, denying in most positive terms the entire statements of THE BEAVER in regard to deserting his wife and elopement with a Miss Davis of this place. He states it is his intention to come here and "make it hot" for our contemporary."—Express.

We give Mr. Jacobs the benefit of the denial implied in the above extract, which is similar in import to a note received by us the other day, still it is simply a denial by an interested party. In justification of our publication of the [illegible], we [illegible] that [illegible] information from a party whom we supposed was in a position to know the facts. If it is incorrect, it is unfortunate, and we would have been happy to do anything in our power to rectify the injury occasioned, if we had been approached in a peaceable and [illegible] able manner, but certainly an appeal to our reason through the medium of a bludgeon is hardly the [illegible] means that injured innocence could adopt to secure satisfaction. With regard to "making it hot" for us, the "professor," true to his promise, visited our office and began the heating operation by assaulting the editorial capnt with a murderous bludgeon, like the topmast of a third-class yacht. In about two minutes he emerged from our sanctum, with a countenance bearing sundry knobby impressions of the editorial sign-manual, leaving behind him, as a memento of the visit, his topmast, and taking away the idea that fooling 'round a printing office, to get satisfaction, is a very unsatisfactory proceeding.

The Way of the Transgresser, etc.

In the Township of Richmond there lives an old man with a young, sportive wife. As usual under such circumstances, the younger party to the matrimonial contract felt unsatisfied in having so unresponsive an object for her ardent affections, justifying the language of Shakespeare,—

"Crabbed age and youth
Cannot live together
Youth is full of sport,
Age likes winter weather."

A short time since a young man, an airy Don Juan, insinuated himself into the good graces of Julia and became domesticated in the abode of Don Alfonso, and in conjunction with the faithless spouse attempted to cuckoo the [illegible] out of the domestic nest by proposing [illegible] should occupy a room up stairs, which [illegible] would use for his virtuous [illegible] at the foot of Donna Julia's [illegible]. The old man objected, whereupon he was thrust from his own house, like a mendicant. Being naturally a little displeased, he took unto himself a band of stalwart and willing youths, who proceeded in the darkness of the night to the house where the guilty pair were rejoicing in being rid of the "old rooster," who, to their dismay, introduced his band into the house and the bedchamber where he found the guilty pair. Don Juan was ordered to arise. He arose, as scantily clad as his Byronic namesake upon a similar occasion, and was unceremoniously divested of his sole garment, taken to an adjacent field, in which ample dressing room, was clothed from head to heel in a suit of tar, thickly and securely ornamented with the plumage of a goose. The young man didn't feel proud of his borrowed feathers either. Returning to the house, the trembling and guilty spouse was threatened with the same mark of kindness, but she wailed, "Do what you like with me, only don't feather me." Don Juan found his way to Napanee, and it took fifteen quarts of Billy Appleby's soft soap to restore him to this primitive condition. Moral, be virtuous and you will be happy, but you can't expect a free suit of clothing.

PERSONALS.

—Many a gay gathering this winter will miss the beautiful and graceful presence of Miss Detlor, who departed on Tuesday last for New York, where she is to spend a large portion of the winter, with the family of Judge Neilson.

Mr. Frank Conway, some time the courteous and gentlemanly day operator at the G. T. R. station in this place has, we are happy to see, been promoted to the position of Station agent at Scarboro' Junction.

—Mr. Ashley, who has some time been connected with the Napanee Express, and whose affability and geniality have won him the respect of all who have been fortunate enough to come in contact with him, has, we regret to say, been compelled by ill health to resign active business. He is with his friends in the neighborhood of Kingston, where we hope rest and recreation will soon restore him to health.

From our own Correspondent.

—George [illegible] is visiting his friends in the neighborhood.

—A purse containing quite a quantity of silver was mislaid by a lady, a stranger, but was found safely on a counter where it had been carelessly left.

—Partridges are coming in freely; sports seem in luck. Two young gents left for ducking on the lakes north.

—Snow is reported to have fallen east of Enterprise some days since.

—Board at Ottawa was both cheap and dear, so smith report; also, pockets light and lighter. No losses to report in this section.

—Miles Caton will soon remove to his new and commodious shop, fitted expressly for his general trade. W. H. Miller will then occupy the stand left by Mr. Caton, to which the Post-office goods of Mr. Miller will be removed. Henry Paul will then remove to his own shop, in which the Post-office is now kept. Some other minor removals are also likely to take place and changes be made.

—The engine on wheels, manufactured by W. Maitland and J. Mulholland, for sawing wood, threshing and traveling on roads, traversed Main-st., Newburgh, under full steam on the 28th inst., and gave good promise of being perfectly under control. A stranger would have supposed the population of Newburgh to have been about fifteen thousand; the streets presented a lively scene, men, women and children crowded the streets and boardwalks,—Broadway would hardly have presented a livelier turnout. I have heard the engine will be on the show ground at the Addington show, to be holden here on the 13th inst. Come and and see "Snorting Billy."

—The rain fell in torrents on Wednesday evening accompanied by hail which was a grand and fearful sight. [illegible] down, [illegible] of lightning [illegible] reveal [illegible] and awe inspiring sight in bringing to [illegible] the hail.

—W. J. C[illegible], long known in this section, now of Michigan, who has been visiting friends for the past month, left for his western home this week. He carries the good wishes and kind regards of many friends and well-wishers.

—A laughable incident occurred in this village a short time since. A dry stick fell or went for [illegible] head, in consequence of which the man could not keep his feet and went for the floor. What will you say when I express a desire for a small favor at your hands. I am greatly desirous of obtaining an article not to be purchased here, and thinking you would oblige a friend am induced to solicit your aid. It is this; I am so anxious to keep up with the fashions, a pair of pin-back pantaloons, and as in duty bound will ever say, thanks. W. H.

We are requested to state that arrangements have been made by the ladies in connection with the C. M. church, Newburgh, for the use of the Agricultural Show grounds, on Wednesday the 13th inst., in connection with the annual County Exhibition. Dinner and refreshments can be obtained at the usual places on the ground, and warm meals served at all hours.

Literary Notices.

WIDE AWAKE, a delightful magazine for the young folks, is to hand for October. In its lively racy style, it fully merits its title. Every household with little folks in it, should be supplied with this charming companion for a winter evening. $2 per year; Boston: D. Lothrop & Co.

WOOD'S HOUSEHOLD MAGAZINE for October is on our table, through the favour of the Household Publishing Company, New York. This number contains the usual amount of excellent reading matter, among which is a continuation of [illegible] sketches finely illustrated, poems, tales, &c. We don't see how so much can be furnished at the low price of one dollar a year.

Railway Accidents.

The Pall Mall Gazette reckons up thirty two railway disasters in England during the months of July and August this year. Nearly all were due to negligence or recklessness; sixteen persons were killed, twenty-six dangerously wounded, forty-six severely hurt, and these, with the number of bruised and badly shaken and shattered, make the whole number of injured about three hundred. This is very good for England, of whose admirable railway service we continually hear so much. It is customary to say that in Great Britain the greatest care and the strictest precautions are taken to prevent accidents on railways. Inventions with this end in view are common, one of the latest being a contrivance by which the door of a car cannot be opened until the train stands perfectly still on the track—an invention of questionable utility, by the way, since in England the carriages are small, and it would be very inconvenient for one to find himself locked in with a lunatic or somebody bent on having his money or his life.

THE TORONTO RIOT.—The following proceedings in relation to the cases of the persons participating in Sunday's riot were heard in the Police Court, Toronto, on the 27th. Albert Willis was charged with throwing stones on Sunday. He was remanded until the 28th inst. Arthur Crawford, who was taking an active part in the proceedings of Sunday, was fined $25 and costs, or two months hard labor. Wm. Cone ran, caught with a pistol in his possession, was charged with carrying unlawful weapons. He was remanded till the 29th. Michael Christie was charged with shooting with intent to injure. P. C. Lobb caught the prisoner in the act of firing from the grounds of Upper Canada College, on to the crowd on Simcoe street. He was remanded for a day.

—Look out for the great auction sale of dry good's at Clinie & Millener & Co., Mill Point, on a week from next Monday and Tuesday. See circulars.

[illegible]—Toronto is rapidly gaining an unenviable reputation as the home of many desperate characters and the scene of numerous fearful crimes. The Leader of Tuesday says: About 2 o'clock this morning, a man named Alex. Beard, was attacked on Simcoe street by two unknown men, supposed to be sailors, and stabbed so badly in the abdomen that he was not expected to live. The Police took active measures to secure the arrest of the offenders, and it is probable that they are now in custody.

"A Little While the Roses Bloom."

A little while the roses bloom,
A little while the soft winds blow,
A little while the baby laughed,
A little while from bud to snow.

But after all the rose was sweet,
And after all the winds have blown,
And after all the baby blessed
And after all it is our own.

If in our thought the rose remains,
And winds are sweet in memory,
Why should not then the baby gone
Forever be a babe to me?

THE STEPMOTHER.

A STORY OF A WIFE'S DEVOTION.

Since his wife died, Mr. March's home had not been a model one. It was left, with the additional care of two young children, to the eldest daughter Maria, and Maria had not faithfully performed her duty, therefore Mr. March felt she had no right to surprise when he told her he was about to bring into the house a second wife, who would be a kind mother to his children.

Miss Maria went out of the door with a bang, and was found in hysterics on the best bed. But Mr. March, giving the servants the same intelligence, kissed the children, and was off to the home of Miss Bell, which had made him tremble, remembering the domain where Maria was mistress.

Miss Milicent Bell, the new step-mother, was a sweet-faced woman, not yet forty, and so winsome as to attract those tired of beauty, her expression of good will, patience, and purpose having grown with practice of her virtues.

The new Mrs. March had not stepped inside her home and received the stiff touch of Miss Maria's hand before she saw the lion in her way. She did not blame the young girl; she rather liked her chivalrous constancy. She drew her to herself and kissed her; and Miss Maria, resenting it as an intrusive impertinence, ran to Mrs. Lee to complain of it.

If ever a woman had her trials, Mrs. March did. Maria was stubborn and was determined not to like her new stepmother, and many were the trials through which the good woman, who tried to do her best, had to pass. But Mrs. March had ample satisfaction in her husband's love and veneration, in his happiness, and the comparative order and comfort to which she had reduced his home. She had made the house beautiful. The table shone with her wedding silver; the dishes were faultlessly served; the children, bright and clean, received smiling encouragement to join the cheerful talk; and if when they were in bed Maria chose to sulk in her room, she lost a great deal of pleasure.

Still Mrs. March's gentle heart was sore over Maria. She would have been glad to win the girl, glad to provide pleasure for her. She understood her emotions, and seldom had any but tender feelings toward her. It hurt her as sorely to think that the noble traits of the boys she was unlikely to be able to train to noble ends.

Occasion, coming to everybody, came at last to Mrs. March, when every child of the house was smitten with the dreadful epidemic at that time raging in the vicinity. Miss Maria, frightened out of her senses, betook herself to Mrs. Lee's. But Mrs. March, though miserable herself, dreamed no fear. She had the children moved into connecting rooms, and although there was a professional nurse with them, vibrated between those rooms as we think only mothers can. Not a night did she sleep till the crisis was over; and in their convalescence it seemed to the children that it was only an angel moving about in her long white robe, bathing their foreheads, singing them to sleep, bringing them tempting messes, telling them entrancing stories, winning their hearts at last completely. On the whole, though tired out in the effort, Mrs. March did not know that in all her life she had had a happier time than during that month of convalescence. And then Maria came home.

"Mamma and I have a secret that she says I may tell you, Maria," cried Julia, after the greeting.

"An open secret," said Maria, insolently, "that all the world knows."

"Do all the world, mamma?" cries Julia.

"Mamma!" says Maria, with a sneer.

"Only a small fraction of it, dear," answers Mrs. Marsh. "I have told no one but you."

"Yes, Miss Maria March," cries Julia, "Mamma! and the dearest, sweetest, best mamma, who took care of me when she could hardly take care of herself, and when you ran away."

"Oh, no, no, Julia," exclaims her mother. "Don't say so. Think that if Maria had staid and taken the illness, it would have occasioned us so much more trouble that it was a kindness in her to go."

"Oh my!" said little Julia, laughing. "Well, I don't care. Look here, Maria—whisper. Mamma says I may name it. She told me when I was getting better, so that I might have something pleasant to think about."

"Pleasant!"

"Oh, yes, so very! And we have had such beautiful talks about how it will look, and what we will do with it. And I am going to wheel it out in Charlie's old carriage—and—and—see here, Maria;" and she drew from under the sofa-pillow an absurd little sock she was knitting, and contemplated it as if it were Penelope's web.

"You must have been mighty sick!" cried Maria. "And as for your mamma, as you call her, you wicked little girl, it is shameless in her to talk so to a child like you!"

Mrs. March took her work and left the room quietly; and then Miss Maria, feeling the welcome of this little new comer was the last outrage, broke into a flood of angry crying, exclaiming at intervals: "Oh, I'll tell my father of you! You see if I don't Maria March!"

Miss Maria presently knew just how sick Julia had been. For it was not a week before the contagion, from which she had run when it was at home, assailed her in some of her outdoor jaunts, and she went down as suddenly as the rest. Her first act was to send for Mrs. Lee, who returned regrets that duty to her own family made it impossible for her to come. Her next was to summon her father and demand a nurse. He assured her that the nurse still in the house should remain.

"A creature of Mrs. March's," murmured the sick girl.

"The sickness is so general that there is not another to be had. Your mother and I will be with you"—

"Don't let her! don't let her!" moaned Maria.

"I am glad to see such consideration on your part, my dear," said her father. "But I am afraid she will insist."

She did insist. When both the doctor and her husband urged Mrs. March to keep away from that sick-room, she replied that it was impossible. "It is the only chance I have to win her love, she exclaimed, with tears, "Heaven sends it—you must not prevent my using it." And the others, fearing too much opposition, let her have her way.

It was a hard way, with nothing but thorns for the treading. With all Maria's behavior, Mrs. March had never realized till the girl's delirium how violent had been her execration of herself. It was a sad strain upon the poor lady's nerves, to bear this torture of reviling, without the suffering which sympathy with sickness gives in itself, or the unconscious effort made by her hourly acts of forgiveness. But though fierce, the fever had a short run; the fatigue of unceasing attendance was great, but the delirium was soon over. Mrs. March trusted that the last act of that illness was delirium and not nature. Left alone with the patient, and obliged to do something that was resisted, she held the aching head on her shoulder, [illegible]ying, though hardly knowing that she said it: "Dear child, why won't you let me love you?" and the next moment received a slap in the face.

If it was delirium, Maria had afterward an uncommonly clear recollection of her wanderings. It was not a strong blow, of course; but in the amazement and recoil Mrs. March staggered back and fell against the corner of the table that held the lamp; and table, lamp and bottles had gone over, and a tongue of fire was licking up the canopy.

Mrs. March never knew how she got the sick girl out of that bed or upon the lounge, or how she tore the burning hangings down and trampled out the fire on the empty hearth. She only remembered having thought that even if Maria died of the exposure, she would rather be supposed guilty herself of carelessness than let the girl's father know of the vicious act. And Maria, whether stunned or overcome, sank into a long slumber, from which, when she awoke, she was out of danger.

I owe you my life, doctor," said Maria, feebly, some days after.

"No, indeed, child,' he replied. "You owe it to your mother. I should never have pulled you through but for her care. You owe it to her, too, that you were not burned in your bed."

"Oh, doctor! Did she tell you, then."

"Tell me what?"

"That I—I," whispered Maria, hoarsely—"I slapped her then?"

"You did!"

"It seems to me I did," said Maria, who knew perfectly well she did.

"No," said the doctor, "she has kept that secret."

"Miss Maria," said the nurse, as the doctor left, "I saw it all. And it is a miracle that it did not kill Mrs. March. You should thank Heaven not only that it is well with you, but with her!" The doctor came back and found the tears trickling through the girl's fingers.

"It was harsh medicine, nurse," said he. "But we will do the best we may with it. I have known you too long, my dear, to disregard the happiness I see you throwing away."

"Oh, doctor," cried Maria, "I think the fever has burned all the venom out of me!" And she burst into her old hysterical sobs. But the doctor soothed her, and did not leave till sure the nurse had not misjudged her strength, and that the truth would be a tonic.

As Maria lay there, thinking it all over, the enormity of her conduct and its possibilities made her blood run cold. If her stepmother had died in consequence of that shock, she did not see how she could live herself. She wondered if the doctor was right in thinking all danger of accident past. She was amazed to think she cared enough to fear it, and then she recalled days and nights of pity and sympathy, and felt all at once that her stepmother was superhuman in her goodness. What if trouble should come! what if this late happiness of her father's should be robbed from him, and by her! what if this gentle life, with the beauty of it that now she saw too late, should go out! She was fast working herself into another fever. She sent for Julia. "I want you to set down," she said, "and tell me all mamma said to you about—about your secret, you know." And as Julia prattled on, the secret became of vital importance. "Oh, how blind, how blind I have been!" she cried. "How happy the little thing will make us! how we will love it together!" And Maria felt as though her own life and death hung upon the fate of that little and unborn child.

When Mrs. March came into the room, having been [illegible]lled to keep her own some days, [illegible] the hand she laid on her for[illegible] [illegible]lled her gently down. "I [illegible] [illegible]ing to forgive m[illegible] The te[illegible] eyes. "[illegible]," she cried. "[illegible]ppy!" she said to her h[illegible] night. "All the children love [illegible] it seems now as though I ha[illegible] more than my share!" And at prayers there was a sort of ecstacy in the way she repeated that verse: "Thou wilt show me the path of life: in Thy presence is fullness of joy; at Thy right hand there are pleasures for ever more."

It was some weeks after, that Maria, having sent the children out to play, stood grave and solemn by the parlor window, feeling as though the Universe itself must hold its breath, when she was summoned by the doctor. "She is failing very fast," he said. No—no hope, no help. She was never strong. Be quiet, dear child; nobody is to blame." Maria did not hear him. She was flying up the staircase, and falling beside Mrs. March's bed. "Oh, it is my fault! I have done it! I!" she sobbed.

"Hush, darling," whispered Milicent. "I have been so happy that I am almost content. Dear," she breathed, "Take my place. Make him"—and her eyes wandered to her husband, who sat utterly overwhelmed—"happy too. I have shewn you how. You mustn't mind his grieving for me just at first; he—he was mine, Maria, more than twenty years ago. And, dear," she began again presently, "I am going to give you my little daughter for your own. You must be to her what I would have been so glad to have been to you. Will you take her?" and she laid Maria's hand on the little velvet cheek. Will you love her?"

"Oh," whispered Maria, aching like a murderer, "If I have killed her mother, I will die for her!" And she gathered the little creature in her arms, and hid her ashen face upon it. There was a long silence in the room. Then Mrs. March turned her sweet dim eyes once more upon her husband. And when at last he lifted his face from hers, the gentle soul of this stepmother had passed away.

IN THE TREATMENT OF DYSPEPSIA we have in Dr. Wheeler's Compound Elixir of Phosphates and Calisaya a remedy worthy the attention of all those suffering from this protean disease. We frequently meet with cases in which all ordinary methods of treatment are of no avail; the stomach and bowels continue disordered, the liver torpid, tongue heavily coated, disagreeable taste in the mouth, acidity, water-brash, flatulence, head-aches, drowsiness after eating, and irritability and restlessness with a depression of spirits. Here the food is not digested and assimilated, the blood becomes impoverished, and constitutional vigor speedily impaired. The great number of these cases in which the Elixir has proved successful has demonstrated beyond question its efficacy in this distressing affection.

BY-LAW NO.——

A By-law to raise by way of loan the sum of Six Thousand Dollars, for the purposes therein mentioned.

PASSED,............1875.

Whereas, the floating debt of the Corporation of the Town of Napanee at present amounts to seven thousand three hundred and seventy-five dollars and forty cents, [illegible] for the purposes of the said corporation at different times from the Merchants Bank of Canada, and falling due at different dates and in various amounts.

And whereas, in respect of the sum of six thousand dollars, part of the said floating debt, no sinking fund or other means of liquidating the same as it becomes due has been provided.

And whereas, the Municipal Council of the said corporation have resolved to consolidate the said debt of six thousand dollars, and to carry into effect the said recited object, it will be necessary for the said Municipal Council to raise the sum of six thousand dollars, in the manner hereinafter mentioned.

And whereas, it will require the sum of nine hundred and sixty dollars to be raised annually, by special rate, for the payment of the said loan, as also hereinafter mentioned.

And whereas, the amount of the whole rateable property of the said Municipality, irrespective of any future increase of the same and also irrespective of any income to be derived from the temporary investment of the sinking fund, hereinafter mentioned, or any part thereof, according to the last revised assessment roll of the said Municipality, being for the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-five, was eight hundred and sixty-four thousand and thirty-seven dollars.

And whereas, the amount of the existing debt of the said municipality is as follows: for principal, the sum of thirty-one thousand three hundred and seventy-five dollars and forty cents, and for interest, the sum of two hundred and forty dollars, making in the aggregate the sum of thirty-one thousand six hundred and fifteen dollars and forty cents, of which said interest no sum whatever is in arrear.

And whereas, for paying the interest and creating an equal yearly sinking fund for paying the said sum of six thousand dollars and interest, as hereinafter mentioned, it will require an equal annual special rate of one-ninth of one cent in the dollar, in addition to all rates to be levied in each year.

Be it therefore enacted by the Corporation of the Town of Napanee, by and through the Municipal Council thereof.

1—That it shall be lawful for the Mayor of the said Town of Napanee, to raise by way of loan, from any person or persons, body or bodies corporate, who may be willing to advance the same upon the credit of the debentures hereinafter mentioned, a sum of money not exceeding in the whole the sum of six thousand dollars, and to cause the same to be paid into the hands of the Treasurer, for the purpose and with the object above recited.

2—That it shall be lawful for the said Mayor to cause any number of debentures to be made, for such sums of money as may be required, not less than one hundred dollars each, and that the said debentures shall be sealed with the seal of the said Municipal Corporation, and be signed by the said Mayor.

3—That the said debentures shall be made payable in ten years at furthest, from the day hereinafter mentioned for this By-law to come into effect, at the office of the Treasurer of the said municipality, and shall have attached to them coupons for the payment of interest.

4—That the said debentures shall bear interest at and after the rate of six per cent per annum from the date thereof, which interest shall be payable on the first days of January and July in each year, at the office of the Treasurer aforesaid.

5—That, for the purposes of forming a sinking fund for the payment of the said debentures and the interest at the rate aforesaid, to become due thereon, an equal special rate of one-ninth of one cent in the dollar shall, in addition to all other rates, be raised, levied and collected in each year upon all the rateable property in the said municipality, during the continuance of the said debentures or any of them.

6—That this By-law shall take effect and come into operation upon, from and after the First day of November, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and seventy-five.

7—That this By-law shall be submitted to the electors of the said municipality, for their approval or otherwise, by their votes to be taken thereon, on the first day of November next, from nine of the clock in the forenoon until five of the clock in the afternoon of the same day, at the following places, and the following persons are hereby appointed Returning Officers, to take the votes at every such place, respectively, that is to say, at W. V. Detlor's office for West Ward, [illegible] and James McCay to be Returning Officer; for Centre Ward, at the Town Hall, and Philip Embury to be Returning Officer; for East Ward, at Warner Block, and Henry Perry to be Returning Officer.

First published September 11th, A.D. 1875.

TAKE NOTICE THAT THE above is a true copy of a proposed By-law, which will be taken into consideration by the Council of this Municipality, after one month from the first publication in The Napanee Beaver, the date of which first publication was Saturday, the [illegible] day of September, A.D. 1875, and that the votes of the electors of the said municipality will be taken thereon, in East Ward, in Warner's Block; in Centre Ward, at the Town Hall; in West Ward, at W. SPECIFIC MEDICINE

Cures all Nervous diseases, such as Tremors, Debility, Prostration, etc., which, in many cases, are produced by over indulgence in the use of tobacco and alcoholic spirits; but the Specific Medicine is more especially recommended as an unfailing cure for Seminal Weakness, Spermatorrhea, Impotency, and all diseases that follow as a sequence of Self Abuse, as Loss of Memory, Universal Lassitude, Pain in the Back, Dimness of Vision, Premature Old Age, and many other diseases that lead to Insanity or Consumption and a Premature Grave, all of which, as a rule, are first caused by deviating from the path of nature and over indulgence.

The Specific Medicine is the result of a life study and many years of experience in treating these special diseases. Full particulars in our pamphlet, which we desire to send free by mail to everyone. The Specific Medicine is sold by all Druggists at $1 per package, or six packages for $5, or will be sent by mail on receipt of the money by addressing WILLIAM GRAY & CO, Windsor, Ont.

Beautiful Things.

Beautiful faces are those that wear—
It matters but little if dark or fair—
Whole-souled honesty printed there.

Beautiful eyes are those that show,
Like crystal panes where hearth-fires glow,
Beautiful thoughts that burn below.

Beautiful lips are those whose words
Leap from the heart like songs of birds,
Yet whose utterances prudence girds.

Beautiful hands are those that do
Work that is earnest, and brave and true,
Moment by moment the long day through.

Beautiful feet are those that go
On kindly ministries to and fro—
Down lowliest ways, if God wills it so.

Beautiful shoulders are those that bear
Ceaseless burdens of homely care,
With patient grace and daily prayer.

Beautiful eyes are those that bless,
Silent rivers of happiness,
Whose hidden fountains but few may guess.

Beautiful twilight, at set of sun,
Beautiful goal, with race well run,
Beautiful rest, with work well done.

Beautiful graves, where grasses creep,
Where brown leaves fall, where drifts lie deep
Over worn-out hands! O, beautiful sleep!

—"Children," asked a minister, addressing a Sunday-school. "Why are we like flowers? What do we have that flowers have?" And a small boy in the infant class, whose breath smelled of vermifuge, rose up and made reply, "Worms." And the minister crept under the pulpit chair to hide his emotion.

—"Is this the doctor's office?" asked a man who popped his head inside the sanctum door. "No, sir—the next flight up stairs." "Well, I'm too tired to go any further," he said sadly; "but if you see the doctor any time this morning, I wish you would tell him that my stepmother is dying, and we'd like to have him call in if he gets time."

—Lucy Larcom began to write verses at the age of seven years, and an amusing blunder occurred when one of her earliest pieces was published. —They tell a wicked story about a jovial son that came up to the gates of heaven and asked admission. "No," said St. Peter, severely, "you can't get in; you are not fit." The traveler stepped back, looked the old saint steadily in the eye, and crowed three times. St. Peter colored, shuddered, and fumbled for his key. "You can go in," said he, in a rather shaky voice, "but don't do that to me again."

Killed at the Altar.

Charleston correspondence of the Atlanta Constitution: scene, Charleston; time, April 22d, 1864. The Yankees from time to time threw shell into the city and nobody seemed to mind it. Miss Anna Pickens, daughter of one of our Southern Governors, never consented to leave the city. Despite the representations of Gen. Beauregard, she remained braving shells and and Greek fire, tending the wounded and cheering all with her presence. Among the wounded officers under her care was a Mr. Andrew de Rochelle, a descendant of one of the noblest Huguenots of the city. The young man was full of the liveliest gratitude to his nurse; gratitude gave birth to more tender sentiments; his suit was listened to; Gov. Picken gave his consent, and the wedding day was fixed for the 22d of April. Lieut. de Rochelle was on duty at Fort Sumter in the morning, and it was determined that the ceremony should take place at the residence of Gen. Bonham, at 8 o'clock. At the moment when the Episcopal minister was asking the bride if she was ready, a shell fell upon the building, penetrated to the room where the company was assembled, burst, and wounded some persons, among them Miss Pickens. The scene that followed cannot be described. Order being at last restored, the wounded were removed, with the exception of the bride, who lay motionless on the carpet. Her betrothed, kneeling and bending over her, was weeping bitterly, and trying to staunch the blood that flowed from a terrible wound under her left breast. A surgeon came and declared that Miss Pickens could live but two hours. We will not paint the general despair. When the wounded girl recovered her consciousness she asked to know her fate, when they hesitated to tell her. "Andrew," she said, "I beg of you to tell me the truth; if I must die, I can die worthy of you." The young soldier's tears were his answer, and Miss Anna, summoning all her strength, attempted to smile. Nothing could be more heart-rending than to see the agony of this brave girl struggling in the embrace of death and against a mortal pain. Gov. Pickens whose courage is known, was almost without consciousness, and Mrs. Pickens looked upon her child with the dry haggard eye of one whose reason totters.

Lieut. de Rochelle was the first to speak. "Anna," he cried, "I will die soon, too, but I would have you now die my wife. There is yet time to unite us."

The young girl did not reply. She was too weak. A slight flush rose for an instant to her pale cheek; it could be seen that joy and pain were struggling in her spirit for the mastery. Lying upon a sofa with her bridal dress all stained with blood, her hair disheveled, she had never been more beautiful. Helpless as she was, Lieut. de Rochelle took her hand and requested the Rev. Dr. Dickinson to proceed with the ceremony. When it was time for the dying girl to say yes, her lips parted several times, but she could not articulate. At last the word was spoken and a slight foam rested on her lips. The dying agony was near. The minister sobbed as he proceeded with the ceremony. An hour afterward an [illegible] and the bridal chamber [illegible] death.

A Balloon on Fire.

That was a sickning spectacle and heart-rending occurrence at the Calhoun Fair last Thursday evening. It was the hour for the grand balloon ascension, the big attraction of the fair. The immense air ship was inflated, and, like some wild beast, was pulling and surging about to be set at liberty. The man with the iron nerve stood ready in his spangles to make the ascent; the manager made a short address to the assembled multitude, relative to the performance of the young æronaut on the trapeze bar attached to the balloon, and just as he was concluding a shout was sent up that the balloon was on fire. Accustomed to such expressions on similar occasions, the manager treated the voice of the multitude as a joke, and the monster ship was freed from its moorings, and shot upwards with the velocity of a rocket, Professor Atchison, the man with the iron nerve, clinging to the trapeze and waving his cap to the multitude of spectators below. When the balloon had gained an altitude of about three hundred yards the æronaut threw his feet over the bar preparatory to his trapeze performance. Hanging by his feet with his head downwards, for the first time during the ascent, he discovered to his horror that the balloon was on fire. Knowing that his doom was sealed, and mindful when too late of the warning of the multitude, he gained an upright position on the bar, as soon as possible, and clutching the rope with his hands he sought by swinging to and fro to divert the course of the balloon in its descent so as to land in a tree-top; and the fire had made too much headway; but the balloon collapsed in an instant and shot downward to the earth with fearful velocity, striking the ground with terrible force, the rapidity of its fall lessened one iota, perhaps, by some projecting twigs from a neighboring tree-top.

The immense crowd was of course paralyzed and stricken dumb with horror; but a few of the more self-possessed, after a moment's delay, rushed to the spot where lay the wreck of the balloon and the remains of the æronaut, who though a mass of broken bones and bruises and bleeding flesh, was not dead. He was at once removed to a place where he could be made as comfortable as possible, and everything that surgical skill and human aid could suggest was done to afford him some relief.

Though crushed almost to pieces, and undergoing intense suffering, he recovered so far as to be able to converse with those around him. Under the influence of the kindest and most careful treatment he has improved slowly, and it is now thought that there are some chances of recovery.—Owensboro' Monitor.

5. Manure every crop which benefits by it, and manure high.
6. Cultivate only safe, paying crops, and select the best seeds for these.
7. Cultivate every crop upon your fields, and in proper rotation.
8. Cultivate more and better fodder.
9. Feed plentifully and of the best fodder.

Taxing the very Rich.

France is on the eve of increasing her income tax, if possible. For some time past there has been a tax of three per cent. per annum on the profits made by banking and finance companies in that country. It is now intended to apply this screw to private banking firms. To meet the difficulty arising from the fact that these do not "declare dividends," though they pay them, it will be proposed to tax that assumed amount. This is obviously such a proper subject and source of taxation that it is scarcely doubted that the National Assembly will so attach it. The profits of private banks in France, but chiefly in Paris, are so enormous that the general public will approve of this fiscal tapping. Already it is suggested that an income tax of six per cent, upon foreign bankers in France ought to be exacted, and probably this will be the figure finally adopted. If the foreign bankers spent in France, as the Rothschilds do, the large profits which they make in that country, the case would be different. It will not be difficult, should the Assembly approve of this new source of revenue, and should its proceeds be considerably, to extend the income tax throughout France, to all commercial companies making or receiving an income above a certain amount. If such a tax were equitably levied on all alike, great landlords included, it would be remunerative and just. At present, in France as well as in England, the income tax slides very gently over capital but presses heavily on labor. The mere rich escape—that is, the Duke of Westminister, with his rental of over a clear thousand pounds a day, does not proportionably pay one-twentieth—aye one-fiftieth—of the income tax levied upon the fluctuating income of professional persons or those employed in precarious business, success in which depends on the health, the brains, and the industry of those eggaged in it.

Unfortunate Marriages.

According to the old joke, married people are like little boys bathing, who cry with chattering teeth to the boys on the shore, "Do come in, it's so warm; but it's not always warm. There is no sadder picture—and it is an every-day picture—than two young persons married perhaps for liking, at any rate, but married in haste to repent at leisure; which they piteously do. Knowing little or nothing of each other's disposition, temper, taste or character, they slowly wake up to find these so diverse that it was morally impossible that they could have been happy very long; and here they are tied together in the most intimate union that life allows, forever. A thought absolutely maddening at first with persons of sensitive or impulsive natures. I fear, if we could look into our neighbors' hearts, the catalogue of suicides never committed, of elopements unaccomplished, even of unperpetrated murders would be, to them who see no difference between the thought and the act, something startling, nay appalling.

But these tragedies do not happen—at least not often. They drop into "genteel comedy." "Can two walk together, unless they be agreed?" Very many couples are not "agreed;" far from it; yet seeing they must walk together somehow, they make up their minds to do it, and they do it. Aye, in spite of good-natured friends, who can not help observing how unhappy they are, and perhaps how happy they might both have been if each had been married to a different sort of person. But this is not the case; they are married to the person whom they themselves chose or fate chose for them. The thing is done, and there is no undoing it.

HOUSEHOLD HELPS.

Lice on Roses.—The best remedy is tobacco water, made by pouring a gallon of boiling water on four ounces of tobacco, and covering till cold. The shoots may be syringed, or dipped in it.

Oatmeal Porridge.—Porridge, to be easily digestible, should be made rather thin and boiled for at least half an hour; the gelatinous properties of the oatmeal will thus be brought out, as will be seen by the mixture, on being dished up, flowing from the pan in a liquid state, and on cooling, acquiring, the consistency of jelly. Made thus, it is one of the most nutritious and digestible of foods, nourishing, say the savants, not only the body but the brain.

Kegeree.—A good breakfast dish, that is too little known, is called "Kegeree," and is made thus: Take some cold fish, and with two forks flake it off in small pieces, melt a bit of butter in a stewpan and toss the fish in it till thoroughly warm. Have ready a cupful of boiled rice and two soft-boiled eggs; add them to the fish, season to taste, give one turn over the fire and serve. This was a favorite dish among the Monks of old, and has lost none of the savor those cunning gastronomers detected in it.

Beef Tea.—Take a pound of the very best beef that can be obtained in the market,—the butcher will tell you that any kind of a piece answers to make beef-tea of, but that is not true,—cut it into small pieces the size of the end of the thumb, place it in a pint basin, cover with cold water, and then place the dish upon the back part of the range or stove, where the water will gradually get warmer, but will not reach the boiling point. Let it stand and simmer in this manner two hours. Then bring it forward, and boil it over a quick fire twenty minutes, and immediately after pour the fluid from the beef, at the same time allowing the little particles which become detached to flow off with it. Now, if there is any fat in the tea, it is well that it should be removed, for the reason that the bile and pancreatic secretion may be unable to emulcify it, and it may do more harm than good. If you wish to be very precise upon this point, the tea can be set aside, and when perfectly cold all the fat can be removed from the surface in a flake; or the fat may be taken up by dropping a piece of flannel upon it as it floats on the surface of the warm tea.

Cooking Oysters.—As the oyster season has commenced, the following receipts for cooking them will be generally approved after the trial:

Spiced Oysters.—Two hundred oysters, two dozen cloves, five dozen allspice, also mace, cayenne pepper, and salt to taste. Strain the liquor through a seive, put it in a saucepan and add the oysters, spice, pepper, salt and a half pint of cider vinegar; place them over a slow fire, and as soon as they come to a boil take them off, pour them into a large bowl and set them away to cool: when cold cover them closely.

Oyster Patties.—Make a rich paste, roll it out half an inch thick, then turn a teacup down on the paste and with the point of a sharp penknife mark the paste lightly round the cup, then remove the cup and cut entirely through: then with the point of the knife make a circle about half an inch from the edge, cut this circle half-way through, place them on tins and bake in a quick oven; when done remove the centre and fill with oysters prepared as follows: Rinse the oysters, put them in a pan over the fire, and when hot stir in the cream, butter and cracker; season to your taste with salt and pepper. When they are scalding hot they are sufficiently cooked.

Scalloped Oysters.—One hundred oysters, a baker's loaf crumbled, four eggs boiled hard, salt and cayenne pepper to taste; chop the eggs very fine and mix with the crumbs, which season highly with cayenne and salt. Rinse the oyster in cold water, cover the bottom of a deep pie-dish with eggs and crumbs, then with a fork place a layer of oysters with two or three small pieces of butter, and so continue till all are in, reserving sufficient crumbs for the cover. For those who like it, a little nutmeg or mace may be added. Bake in a quick oven three-quarters of an hour and serve hot.

COULDN'T PLAY IT.—A colored man named Nelson is owing a butcher on Beaubien street five or six dollars, and after trying in vain to collect the money the butcher and a friend put their heads together the other night and laid a plan. About midnight they called at Nelson's House, and he was awakened by a rap on the window,

"Who's dar?" he called out.

"The Devil!" solemnly replied the butcher.

"You is, hey?"

"Yes. I want you!"

"What fur?"

"You refuse to pay your butcher, and I am sent to take you to the bottomless pit!"

"You is!"

"I am! Come forth at once!"

"Ize coming!" replied the negro as he jumped out of bed; "I can't pay dat six dollars half as easy in any other way, an' de old woman is so mighty cross, Ize glad to git away from home!"

The butcher and his friend didn't wait for Mr. Nelson to come out.—Detroit Free Press.

BETTER THAN FISH.—They recognized each other at one of the fish stands, and called out:

"Is that you, Mrs. Jones? And are you after a fish?"

"And is that you, Mrs. Toddle? And no, I never buy fish."

"You don't?"

"No. I have got the particularest husband you ever saw. If he's eating fish and gets four or five scales in his mouth he makes as much fuss as some men would over a cobble stone in a loaf of bread. So I buys liver, and there's no scales on it, and all you have to do is to give it a rinse, flop it into the spider, and the butcher gets all the blame."

SWEET OIL FOR THE RELIEF OF POISON.—A farmer writes: "It is now over twenty years since I heard that sweet oil would cure the bite of a rattlesnake, not knowing that it would cure other kinds of poison. Practice and experience have taught me that it will cure poisons of any kind, both on man and beast. The patient must take a spoonful of it internally, and bathe the wound for a cure. To cure a horse it takes eight times as much as for a man. One of the most extreme cases of snake bites occurred eleven years ago. It had been thirty days standing, and the patient had been given up by his physician. I gave him a spoonful of the oil, which effected a cure. It will cure bloat in cattle caused by fresh clover. It will cure the sting of bees, spiders, or other insects, and persons who have been poisoned by a low, running vine called ivy."

—Look not mournfully into the past—it comes not back again; improve the present—it is thine; go forth to meet the shadowy future without fear and with manly heart.—Longfellow.

LADIES' COLUMN.

New York Fashion Notes.

—Wedding journeys are out of style.

—Slippers are to be worn with evening dress this winter.

—Satin with velvet is a new combination for ball costumes.

—Pointed hoods lined with fur are seen on the new circular cloaks.

—Russian sable muffs are made in stripes showing the use of three different skins in the making.

—Black merino and black silk stockings are very much in vogue.

—Slippers or low shoes, with colored kid or silk inserted, are used with colored stockings for the house.

—With the announcement of a death, recently, the curious request was made that "friends should not send flowers."

—There is an institution in London where dressmaking, millinery and embroidery are taught—all for the sum of five dollars.

—With the broad-soled shoes which are made for walking and cold weather, the addition of cork soles is considered an advantage.

—All the new hats and bonnets, excepting one or two English shapes which shade the eyes, are furnished with very full face trimmings.

—A boa, when worn with a jacket, measures only one yard and a half, but when used alone one of two yards in length is preferred.

—Fur linings for new circular cloaks are of "squirrel back." Small pockets are placed on each side of the front and serve to pull it together.

—The Juive robe, which is to meet with great favor this season, is simply a short second dress, slashed so as to show to advantage an underskirt of a different material.

—It is now fashionable to mix gray fur with dark furs, and to gratify the new taste furriers are obliged to sew or paste white points or hairs in all the new trimming furs.

—A new notion about felt hats is that they shall not themselves match the dress in color—a preference being declared for grey and cream color—but shall have trimmings like the costumes.

—An agency is to be started in Paris which will provide for everything connected with a wedding—including civil and religious ceremonies, music, ball-room, wedding finery, carriages.

—A polonaise adopted from one of Worth's "latest," is made much like a gentleman's frock coat, has pockets on the sides, is open directly in the back, and has only three buttons in front.

—Veils three-quarters of a yard wide are to be worn with bonnets, and are of black Chantilly lace without dots, having hems an inch wide. A row of jet or gilt beads is sometimes used for heading.

—Half-fitting English jackets of silk lined with fur are to be very much worn. The same effect is attained with much less expense by wadding and lining the sacque with silk and bordering with fur.

—A new basque, where two kinds of material is used, has a shield front—that is, a piece of the stuff laid on in double-breasted style with buttons down each side. The overskirt matching this has a graduated piece down the front and revers held with buttons.

—Caps for children one or two years old, are made with velvet and trimmed with Valenciennes lace—sometimes with a whole square of lace that nearly covers the top. Brown and very dark navy blue are favorite colors in velvet.

—A little girl's hat of gray felt has a wide brim which is worn over the face in front and turned up square in the back. It is bound and trimmed with the new basket woven or satte silk ribbon, and is simply ornamented with two small gray wings, which are placed at the back a little toward the left side.

—New cloaks of beaver and other heavy stuffs, unless made in circulars, vary so in form that it is impossible to say one is more fashionable than another. Two things are however noticeable. Cloaks are made much longer than they have been for several years and almost invariably have coat sleeves.

—A pretty hat for a little girl is of gray felt, and has a wide brim bound with velvet an inch an a half wide, in a color the exact match of the hat. Velvet laid in folds is laid around the crown, and on the right side, where the hat is turned up, there are bows of velvet which hold the stem of a shaded gray tip.

—Seal-skin jackets are in as high favor this season as they have been for several years. The newest ones are without trimming and are two or three inches longer than those of last year, besides being more closely fitted to the figure in the back. Old sacques are remodelled and freshened by adding a bordering of sea otter, Alaska sable or silver fox. A whole set, consisting of sacque, muff and boa, costs from $100 to $425, according to quality.

—Something novel and also suitable for slight figures is a blouse waist or rather an imitation of one which serves the same purpose. A tight-fitting waist is first made to which is added in front pieces of the goods three-eighths of a yard wide gathered at the top and bottom. The lower part is concealed under a belt coming from the seams under the arms, and which is buckled in front. The neck has a standing collar to the back and a gathered ruffle in front.

A Letter of Advice.

The postal arrangements require postmasters to remit quarterly the amount due the department, and in the same mail which contains the remittance a letter is to be sent, called a letter of advice, stating the amount remitted, for which a blank is usually furnished. Brother Boardman the postmaster at Cooks Mills not having a blank, wrote the following letter:

To Postmaster-General: Seeing by the postoffice regulations, that I am required to send you a letter of advice, I must say that if your office don't pay any better than mine, I advise you to give it up.

SLEEP FOR CHILDREN.—There is no danger that children can sleep too much. The old proverb, "Who sleeps, eats," is illustrated in those little ones who sleep most. Wakeful children are almost always peevish, irritable, and lean. If they can be induced to sleep abundantly, they are quite likely to become good-natured and plump. Their sleep should be as much during the hours of darkness as possible, and therefore it is better that they should go to bed before sunset to have their sleep out, than to lie long after sunrise in the morning.

MICROSCOPES.—Upon examining the edge of the sharpest razor with a microscope, it will appear fully as broad as the back of a knife—rough, uneven, and full of notches and furrows. An exceedingly small needle resembles an iron bar, but the sting of a bee seen through the same instrument, exhibits everywhere the most beautiful polish, without a flaw, blemish, or inequality, and it ends in a point too fine to be discerned. The threads of a fine lawn are coarser than the yarn with which ropes are made for anchors. But a silk worm's web appears perfectly smooth and shining, and everywhere equal. The smallest dot that is made with a pen appears irregular and uneven. But the little specks on the wings or bodies of insects are found to be [illegible]. How magnificent are the works of God —Fourteen hundred empty houses give evidence of the dull times in [illegible]. Many mechanics and others have been compelled to remove in search of employment.

SATURDAY NOVEMBER 27th, 1875

DEATH OF VICE-PRESIDENT WILSON

Last Monday morning Henry Wilson, vice-President of the United States, died at Washington of disease of the brain and spinal cord, in the sixty-third year of his age. This singular man was a striking example of the fact, that to energy and perseverance, humble parentage, a childhood of poverty, and the want of educational advantages, are no obstacles in the path to power and one of the highest offices in the gift of the people of the great republic. He was born at Farmington, N. H., of very humble parents, who, in fact were little better than vagrants. When he was twenty-one years of age, he left his native place, with his worldly wealth in hand, and being too poor to pay his stage fare, he trudged on foot to Nantick, Mass., where he learned the trade of a shoemaker. After this he attended school and took the first step towards the high office, which by various graduations he succeeded in reaching. He was a good shoemaker and as good a Whig, and with Seward, Sumner, Hale, Chase and Greeley, took a prominent part in the struggle that ended in the extinction of American slavery. With no conspicuous mental qualities, Mr. Wilson by an indomitable perseverance, and a strict adherence to his anti-slavery opinions, won his way. The New York Sun gives an excellent summary of his career in these words: "Finally, we part from him as from a humane, well-meaning, patriotic man, who from the lowest and most unfavorable level in life, rose to one of the greatest positions, and who, having filled a large place in public affairs, dies without an enemy, and is regretted by every generous and kindly heart."

THE NEW CANADIAN LOAN.

We Canadians should be highly flattered with the exceedingly favorable manner in which the new Canadian loan has been placed upon the English stock market. The Opposition journals have croaked loudly and long about the financial ruin which they asserted was staring us in the face. But this was merely said for the sake of getting a fling at the Administration, which, if our credit abroad is adopted as a rule of guidance in the matter, have managed our financial matters in a most masterly manner. But such is hardly the cause why capitalists regard Canadian securities with so much favor. Richard John Cartwright is hardly to be held entirely responsible, by virtue of his financial policy for the very favorable auspices under which the last loan was floated. The cause is rather to be sought in the great natural resources of the country, the contented industry of our people and the good record we have made in the past. The grain of salt in the shape of the guarantee of the British Government, no doubt had something to do in influencing British capitalists to invest in Canadian bonds. A London paper in alluding to this subject, says:

"The success that has attended the placing of the Canadian loan has directed attention to the value of Canadian securities as investments. At the present low rate of money and the difficulty of obtaining a sound investment, these colonial investments are likely to increase in popular estimation. The last Canadian loan issued is already at a premium of about two per cent. on the minimum fixed by the government. At the present price British colonial securities should yield about four and a half per cent to investors.

ONTARIO LEGISLATURE.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE.

Toronto, Nov. 25.—This day at three o'clock P. M., His Excellency the Hon. Donald Alexander Macdonald, Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Ontario, proceeded in state to the chamber of the Legislative Assembly, and being seated on the Throne, was pleased to open the first session of the third Parliament of Ontario with the following speech:—

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly;

"The melancholy event which occurred since the dissolution of the late House cannot but be in the memory of all on the present occasion, and I give but utterance to the common sentiments, when I express profound regret that a more lengthened career of usefulness had not fallen to my esteemed predecessor. In consequence of his lamented death, the duty of discharging the high and responsible functions of Lieutenant-Governor of my native province has unexpectedly been imposed upon me. I hope so to discharge them as becomes a faithful constitutional Governor under the British system which we have the happiness of possessing, and as may promote the best interests of the country.

The reforms which have from time to time been made in election laws of the Province resulted in that order and decorum at the late general and other elections which were anticipated. In view of the experience gained by the operation of these laws, it may be proper to consider whether some of them may not be so improved that without foregoing or diminishing the advantages which they secure you may free constituencies and candidates from such undue hardships to which occasionally they are now exposed. Bills with this object and for further improvement of the law as for voters' lists will probably be submitted to you.

The system of voting by ballot being now in force with respect to all Parliamentary and Municipal elections, a bill will be laid before you for the extension of the system of by-laws requiring the assent of ratepayers.

It is a matter for congratulation that, while so many countries are suffering from a depressed state of trade and other industries, our Province has been blessed with an abundant harvest, and has thereby been relieved to a considerable extent from an equally suffering condition, as well as from the effects of over speculation. I have every confidence that the period will not be long before the Province will enter upon a fresh career of activity and prosperity.

You will probably think it right to consider with earnestness and caution how far it may be wise and of general benefit for the province out of its accumulated funds to afford aid to projected railways which have not hitherto been assisted or to supplement the aid already granted to any of the railways which are in progress. Your special attention will probably be invited to the question of the best mode and time of affording encouragement to railway enterprises which have for their object opening up, settling and improving the more remote areas of the Province.

It is satisfactory to know that the expenditure of the Province for the promotion of immigration continues to bear good fruit. A large number of immigrants belonging to the class most needed have settled in our province during past years, notwithstanding inducements and temptations held out by our countries. I am glad also to have it in my power to state that an improved system which was adopted last year by Dominion and Provincial Governments has enabled work to be carried on with increased efficiency as well as greater economy.

There will be submitted to you a considerable portion of the work performed by the Commissioners to whom was assigned the task of classifying and consolidating the statue laws affecting Ontario. The Commissioners have during the past year been continuing their important labors, and in the course of their work they have had their attention called to desirable amendments in various statutes. One or more bills embodying their recommendations will probably be submitted to you for consideration.

The Chief Superintendent, who has ably managed the Educational Department for more than thirty years, being desirous of retiring from office, you will probably be called upon to consider whether the time has not arrived when the efficiency of the system would be promoted by placing the work of the Department in the hands of a responsible Minister of the Crown.

I have taken opportunity during the summer of visiting most of the public institutions of the Province which are under Government management, and I have been much gratified by what I saw of their condition. One class of these the asylums for lunatics and idiots has become insufficient for the accommodation of the unhappy persons for whom they are designed, the number of whom are increasing as the population of the Province advances. I am sure that you will not hesitate to make such further provision for their keeping and treatment as may be necessary.

A measure will be submitted to you having for its object the securing of a complete system of vital statistics.

I invite your attention to the desirability of some legislation for making fuller provision than hitherto for the payment of witnesses on criminal prosecutions.

The question of the Eastern boundary of Ontario so far as relates to Provincial action, has been fully determined agreeably to the act passed at the last session of the Legislature. I regret that the other matters of difference between Ontario and Quebec remain unsettled. There has been correspondence on the subject, and the Quebec Government have intimated its intention of uniting with us in taking up the matters vigorously after the prorogation of the Legislature now in session. Meantime we continue in the enjoyment of most of the assets assigned to this Province by the arbitrators, as well as of Quebec's share of money realized since confederation, from sales of school land.

Since the dissolution of the last house the question of Northerly and Westerly boundaries of the Province has continued to receive the attention of the Government.

Informal negotiations have taken place with respect to both a compromise and arbitration, which the Legislature authorized, but no final result has been arrived at. Meanwhile steps have been taken to obtain some additional evidence expected to be of value.

The accounts of the province will be submitted to you without delay, and I have the satisfaction of assuring you that notwithstanding drafts, made on account of appropriations which, preceding the Legislature's, authorized to to be made out of our surplus in encouraging railways and other public works, and after distributing $3,000,000 amongst the municipalities, there yet remained on the 30th of September last a large amount of Provincial resources available at cost.

The estimates for the coming year have been prepared and will be laid before you. An endeavor has been made to frame them with a due regard to economy, and at the same time to consider and secure the efficiency of the public service. In leaving you now to your deliberations my prayer is that the Great Ruler of the Universe may so influence them that they redound to your credit and may promote the welfare of the community.

A Child Born to a Mother Seventy-seven Years Old.

Truly this is the age of wonders, of big bonanzas, rich discoveries and remarkable events, and Clay County is destined to be not among the least noted places upon the pages of future history for the wonderful events which have transpired within her borders. To the wife of Judge Thomas J. Gunn, who resides three miles south of Smithville, in this county, on the road leading from Smithville to Liberty, was born a boy baby, on the 27th day of September last, the mother being in the 77th year of her age. The baby weighed eight pounds at the time of its birth, and is a hearty well developed child.

Judge Gunn is an old, well-known, and highly respected citizen of Clay Co., and gave us this piece of information from his own lips, which was corroborated by one of his nearest neighbors, who was present at the time and weighed the child.

We have known Judge Gunn for several years, having served in the same regiment with him in the late war, and can vouch for the truth of the above.—Missouri Advance.

—An English æronaut lately tested a machine of his own patent called the parakite. It is thirty feet wide. As soon as the sail was fixed over the frame-work and the front or windward side of the parakite raised, so as to allow the wind to touch the machine on its under surface, it was instantly converted into a concave form and showed symptoms of rising. The wind was blowing at the rate of not more than two miles an hour, but with this slight breeze the æronaut was carried into the air. The idea is to put it to practical utility for war purposes, engineering, and signalling, where it is necessary to attain lofty elevations. The machine covers an area of 700 superficial feet, and its entire weight is 100 pounds. The inventor asserts that it can be used successfully in any wind ranging between four and forty miles an hour, and an altitude of from 600 to 1,000 feet can be attained.

The exports for the same period were:—Produce of mines, $218,028.00; do fisheries, $633, 874,00; do. forest, $2, 825,882.00; do. animals and their produce $2,014,113.00; agricultural products, $1,390,401.00; manufacture, $351,170.00; total produce of Canada, $7,615,741.00; coin and bullion, $165,255.00; goods not the produce of Canada, $1,330,179.00; grand total, $9,121,275.00.

To our Correspondents.

At "Moboy's" request we suggest the following to our correspondents as a guide in writing for The Beaver.

Write proper names plainly.

Write only on one side of the sheet.

Be brief in statement and sparkling in comment.

Write with ink—not with pencil.

When you have nothing to say on any subject, say nothing. Don't string words together for the sake of filling pages of manuscript.

"Short items and lots of them," was the homely rule given by a country editor to a correspondent once upon a time; and it is a capital one.

Avoid "puffs" for this one and that, and save the editor the trouble of "cutting them out" of your letter.

You can keep the authorship of your letter as nearly a secret from the public as you please; indeed nobody need know that you write for the newspaper, unless you choose to let them know yourself. The editor won't tell—rely on that.

Don't be influenced too much by the advice (which will be freely offered—depend upon that!) of people who don't know any more about it than you do, as to what you shall put in your letters. Be sure you are right then go ahead.

Always manage matters so that your letter reaches us on Thursday morning at latest: then, if anything else important occurs, and you can send it in time for that week's issue, send it in a postscript or addendum. Many a good letter has been lost to the world because it reached the editor too late to put it in type.

Remember it is the privilege of the editor to omit any portion of a correspondence, and make any suitable correction otherwise necessary.

QUALITY AND QUANTITY.

Every man desires to get the most and the best for his money. And every sensible and prudent man puts the last item first; only the ignorant and penurious take it the other way. He who considers first how much he will get, is very likely to take an inferior if not a worthless article, and is at the mercy of any cheap John he meets. If you buy coal, or dry goods, or groceries, you want, first, a thoroughly good and reliable article—the best the market affords—and then, just as much of it as the state of the market will fairly warrant. If a dealer offers more than this, there is a deficiency somewhere, and somebody is the loser,—the buyer, most likely,—not the seller, if he knows himself. This selling at "less than cost," is a humbug, in most cases. If really done at all, somebody must suffer. And a thing may be sold below cost and still above its value. There is room to suspect this when extra inducements are thrown in. In all square dealing, you may expect to pay the worth of what you get, and to get the full measure and value of what you pay for.

In nothing are these obvious, common sense principles more true than in buying life insurance. They are trite enough, surely, yet they need continual reiteration. Neglect of them is the more foolish in this, as it may even prove fatal. A loss in buying fuel or provisions is but a temporary inconvenience, and may be remedied,—you will look out and do better next time; but the insurance contract is perhaps the only resource of those you love and leave at death, and must be a sure thing, or it is worse than useless. You cannot afford to waste anything on uncertainties.

You want, first genuine insurance; then as much of it as can be safely and honestly bought for the premium paid. Anything offered beyond this is delusive. You want to know that the money you pay secures to your family, at your death, just what the policy purports to secure to them. This and no more, you are squarely entitled to. Any "plan" of insurance which proposes to do more for you, is questionable at least. You don't want to buy a lottery ticket at high price, entitling you to a chance of having part of your premium returned to you sometime as a "dividend." At the best it is only a chance; for no company can guarantee such a return, and if it could, you may as well keep your money and have the use of it as you go, or better still, buy more insurance with it. Nor do you want any bait in the shape of extra privileges, involving extra risk, as an inducement to insure. You want a company to promise what it is able to perform; and not by undertaking more, to weaken its ability to pay at all.

The Travelers can and will do just what any reasonable man ought to expect. It will guarantee a certain sum for a certain premium, putting that premium just as low as the risk incurred and the absolute security of the policy-holder will permit. Its resources are ample; its contract is definite; its plan is the simplest and best, as experience has abundantly proved; it furnishes insurance, and promises nothing else. It makes no "dividends" to policy-holders, for it does not ask them to pay for any such misnomer. It takes no notes in part payment of premium, and has none to return in part payment of the policy. The assured pays cash for his insurance, and his family gets clean cash and no discount at his death. The Travelers gives in quality and quantity all that any man who wants the best and the most insurance for his money can ask for.

THE WEEKLY SUN.
1776. — New York. — 1876.
Eighteen hundred and seventy-six is the Centennial year. It is also the year in which an Opposition House of Representatives, the first since the war, will be in power at Washington; and the year of the twenty-third election of a President of the United States. All these events are sure to be of great interest and importance, especially the two latter; and all of them and everything connected with them will be fully and freshly reported and expounded in the Sun.

The Opposition House of Representatives, taking up the line of inquiry opened years ago by the Sun, will sternly and diligently investigate the corruptions and misdeeds of Grant's administration; and will, it is to be hoped, lay the foundation of a new and better period in our national history. Of all this the Sun will contain complete and accurate accounts, furnishing its readers with early and correct information on these absorbing topics.

The 23d Presidential election, with the preparations for it, will be memorable as deciding upon Grant's aspirations for a third term of power and plunder, and still more as deciding who shall be the candidate of the party of Reform, and as to electing that candidate. Concerning all these subjects, those who read the Sun will have the constant means of being thoroughly informed.

The Weekly Sun, which has attained a circulation of over 80,000 copies, already has its readers in every State and Territory, and we trust that the year 1876 will see their numbers doubled. It will continue to be a thorough newspaper. All the general news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment; and always, we trust, treated in a clear, interesting and instructive manner.

It is our aim to make the Weekly Sun the best family newspaper in the world, and we shall continue to give in its columns a large amount of miscellaneous reading, such as stories, tales, poems, scientific intelligence and agricultural information, for which we are not able to make room in our daily edition. The agricultural department especially is one of its prominent features. The fashions are also regularly reported in its columns; and so are the markets of every kind.

The Weekly Sun, eight pages, with fifty-six broad columns is only $1.20 a year, postage prepaid. As this price barely repays the cost of the paper, no discount can be made from this rate to clubs, agents, Postmasters, or anyone.

The Daily Sun, a large four page newspaper of twenty-eight columns, gives all the news for two cents a copy. Subscription, postage prepaid, 55c. a month or $6.50 a year. Sunday edition extra, $1.10 per year. We have no travelling agents.
Address, THE SUN, New York City.

FRUIT AND ORNAMENTAL TREES, SHRUBBERY, etc.
Office of Lakeview and Macedon Nurseries, Rochester, N. Y., Nov. 1st, 1875.
We caution the public against certain persons who are in the habit of using our catalogues and representing themselves as our agents, but who in reality have no dealings with us. The reputation of our establishment has already been injured in several parts of the country by such parties. We therefore give notice that all our agents have certificates bearing our signature, stating such fact, and of no later date than six months. Should any doubt exist in the mind of any one as to the authority of parties representing themselves as our agents, we will consider it a favor if they will communicate with us by mail, giving the person's name who may be soliciting such orders. We recommend that purchasers leave the selection of varieties with us as far as possible, merely stating the proportion of summer, fall, and winter fruits wanted, as our experience enables us to select such sorts as are adapted to different localities.

Old Age.

The Whig records the death of a woman at the advanced age of 103 years. Tell us her front name, and we'll write "St." before it, for a woman who has lived in Kingston that length of time deserves to be canonized as much as St. Peter ever did.

Accident.

On Saturday last Mr. James Legge, tinsmith, while working on the roof of Mr. Jamieson's bakery, stepped on a patch of ice and was precipitated to the ground, a distance of about twenty-feet, whereby his forearm was broken and severe injuries inflicted upon one of his feet.

Skating.

The severe frost of the last few nights has completely covered the river with ice, and the boys have "high old times" skating; but are greatly indignant at the way the little Norfolk floundered round to get into harbor, breaking up the ice, and spoiling, to a great extent their sport. She remains here frozen in as tight as—as Jimmy Pearson.

Skating Rink.

Mr. Jasper Snider informs us that he will have his skating rink ready as soon as the ice is fit. He began constructing the dressing room on Thursday. The rink will be much larger than that of last winter, and will be kept as good as possible. Mr. S. intends to dispense with the assistance of a committee, and parties can obtain tickets for the season, or month, or by nightly admission fee.

Sermons.

—Last Sunday our clergymen and ministers had a holiday, the town pulpits being all filled except that of the R. C. church, by divines from other fields of labor. Rev. Mr. Mills preached to thronged seats in the C. M. church; every inch of available space was occupied in the Presbyterian church, by a congregation that listened with great attention to the eloquent preaching of Rev. Mr. Ballantyne; Ven. Archdeacon Parnell conducted the services in St. Mary Magdalene's church; and Rev. Mr. J. N. Anger, a student of Albert College, filled the desk of Rev. Mr. Lane, who, we regret to say, was called away by family affliction, his mother being on her deathbed.

Oyster Supper.

On Friday evening last an oyster supper was given by the young men of Selby, in aid of the fund for placing the windows in the new C. M. Church at that place, which was a very successful and pleasant affair. John O. Sexsmith, Esq., after the destruction of the oysters, was called to the chair, and Rev. Messrs. Fergusson and Crothers delivered excellent speeches. Misses McBride, Rose, Valleau, Beeman, German, Sexsmith and others furnished the musical part of the entertainment. The proceeds netted about $50, which, considering the unfavorable weather, was a handsome sum.

Napanee High School.

On Friday last Mr. Marling, High School Inspector, visited our High School, and after a careful examination of the principal classes he expressed himself well satisfied with the proficiency of the pupils. He was especially pleased with the spelling, as tested by a long and difficult dictation exercise, pronouncing it the best which he had met this year. Mr. Marling is an admirable examiner; his suavity of manner at once puts the pupils at their ease, and his judicious mode of questioning readily tests their attainments. Our High School now stands among the very best in Ontario, and we trust that our people will do all in their power to assist and encourage the hard-working teachers in maintaining its present high position.

Hymeneal.

It all happened in the Township of Camden, dear the flourishing village of Enterprise. He is on the shady side of sixty and rheumatic—some say more so. About six months ago he was left a disconsolate widower, and weeping refused to be comforted. The fulminations of the Globe in favor of connubial felicity did not move him; but when the BEAVER opened its powerful broadsides the force was irrestible, and he yielded, fully convinced that society expected of him another sacrifice. So laying aside his sable robes, putting a BEAVER in his pocket and dexterously manipulating the few straggling locks so as to cover the bald spot on his head, he once more sallied forth to court the favors of the fickle god. His success was most surprising, for last week he led to the hymeneal altar a blooming bride of eighteen summers. Express.

A Madman's Murder.

We have received particulars of a horrible homicide that took place near Arden a short time since. For about two months past J. T. Clarke, of that place, formerly an M. E. minister, has been afflicted with insanity. He seemed to have had a premonition of his approaching demented condition, and secured a fatal promise from his friends that they would not send him to an asylum but keep him at home. At the time in question, the wife of the maniac was lying ill up stairs, and the latter wishing to ascend to her apartment, his father made an attempt to prevent him, but in the struggle that ensued, the infuriated Bedlamite kicked his father in the breast, inflicting injuries that ended in death in about ten days. After having dealt his father the death blow, the unfortunate parricide went up stairs and seizing his two year old son, threw him down stairs, breaking his collar bone. After these little eccentricities, he was secured and placed in confinement.

Don't Fail

To read McRae & Co.'s advertisement this week. By so doing carefully and giving due heed thereto, you will save money.

The Grangers

Of this county held their regular monthly meeting in the Town Hall on Wednesday last. Not being a Granger, THE BEAVER was not admitted to their deliberations, but we shall give a full report of their proceedings next week.

The Market.

The approach of the holidays makes the produce market lively. On Saturday there was the largest market we have had for some time. The market square was full to overflowing, and the crowd trickled into adjoining streets.

Stage Line.

Messrs. Blewett Bros. intend to start their accommodation line of stages between Napanee and Picton immediately on the close of navigation, and the indications are that navigation is now practically closed, the ice in the river being so thick as to resist the attempt of anything but an ironclad force to a passage through.

Band Concert.

We are informed that the Napanee cornet band intend giving a concert to supplement the funds necessary to retain the services of their present talented instructor, Mr. Wesha, under whose instruction the band has progressed more than since they were organized. We wish the boys every success, and bespeak for them a bumper house for the concert. Wouldn't it be nice if the Town Council should double the sum which will be realized by the concert entertainment.

Advertising Enterprise.

The Toronto Daily Mail of Wednesday contains a full-page advertisement for John McDonald & Co., the celebrated Toronto wholesale dry goods house. A few years ago, Gray, Rennie & Co., in starting in business in Toronto in the same line, took a full page in the Globe at $500. Others saw the benefit of the plan, and it has been often adopted by first class houses, who, unsatisfied with their column or two, have made a bold strike and forced the public to take cognizance of their business. Though costly to think of at first, it is in the end a paying investment, which a first-class business man will readily acknowledge.

The Oswego Belle.

This new and beautiful craft arrived in our river from her first trip to Oswego, on Wednesday. With the assistance of the tug Sherwood, she made her way up the river, blocked as it is with ice, and is laid up here for the winter. Wherever she has shown herself this fall, she has won the hearty admiration of all nautical men, and it is safe to say that no finer steamer than the Belle is afloat in the lakes. Her internal appointments, both for the accommodation of passengers and freight are perfect. The furniture, which was supplied by Messrs. Gibbard & Son, is magnificent. Her speed will be about fourteen miles an hour. Her officers are: Captain Mosher, Mate Pender, Purser Johnson and Engineer McFall, competent, polite and attentive gentlemen.

Social and Concert.

We learn from the Reporter that on Friday evening last, a very interesting and pleasant social gathering was held in the Orange Hall, at Clark's Mills, in aid of the Sabbath School, in connection with the C. M. Church, of that place. Considering the state of the roads and the darkness of the night, the attendance was good. Several were present from Newburgh. Rev. A. A. Smith presided. Refreshments were served in good style. Excellent music was discoursed by Misses Williams, Clarke, Parrott, VanDyke, Rockwell, Mesdames Robson and Sherlock, Mr. Middleton and 8 pupils of the School. Interesting readings were given by Miss Longmore, of Clark's Mills, and Messrs. Davis and McCallum, of Newburgh. A very fine recitation on "Mary Queen of Scotts," was given by Mr. G. Parker, and the Rev. W. Short, of Centreville, gave a very appropriate address. The national anthem was sung at close.

Hotel Change.

At last the Campbell House has changed proprietors. Mr. W. N. Kinne has disposed of his interest in it to Messrs. Marsden & Moore, of Toronto, who have a good hotel record, which we shall be happy to refer to next week. While warmly welcoming the new firm, we regret to lose the portly and jovial boniface, who for three years has conducted this house in such a manner as to win the almost exclusive patronage of the travelling public, and leave a solid reputation for the Campbell House, which will no doubt prove a good "send off" to the new proprietors, and which they will certainly amply sustain. Especially the farmers are lond in their regrets at the idea of Mr. Kinne's departure. Very many no doubt will be pleased to know that the bibulistic department still remains under the charge of the popular and skilful dispenser of "mixed sweets," the golden haired Bedfordshire boy, Harry Harbon, the man of the spirit hand. Although we never look at things in that light, we also rejoice that Harry is still spared to us.

Fashionable Wedding.

The fashionable wedding which was forecast by our Tamworth correspondent last week, took place in the M. E. church in that place on Thursday evening, the Rev. Mr. Rogers, tying the knot which is to bind, the happy pair in the bonds of the sweet slavery of connubial felicity. The fortunate couple was Miss Lucy Forchee, daughter of the late Allen Forchee, Esq., and Mr. Benjamin Smith. The ceremony was performed at six o'clock in the evening, before a large number of invited spectators. The lovely and blushing bride, richly and tastefully dressed, was supported by her two bridesmaids, Miss Aylsworth, of Napanee, and Miss Chamberlain, of Tamworth, both beautifully attired. Dr. Beeman, of Centreville, and Mr. G. H. Robinson, of Selby, stood by the bridegroom in the trying hour. Mr. James Aylsworth, druggist, brother-in-law of the bride, gracefully gave her away. After the fatal noose was secured, the bridal party repaired to the residence of Mr. Aylsworth, where a sumptuous wedding dinner was partaken of, during which the Tamworth brass band played several fine airs. On Friday morning the newly-wedded couple took the morning train West on their honeymoon tour. We give our heartiest cond—congratulations, and fling after them an entire junk shop of the conventional old shoes. Our thanks are due to the bride for the usual slice of the bridal bun; we wish her and her fortunate husband may realize that matrimony will be the success which they now so ardently expect.

PERSONALS.

—We omitted to mention last week that Mr. J. Rud. Perry, connected with the Canada Pacific Survey, is spending a few weeks at home and vicinity, in Ernesttown. His rustications in the far Nor' West have agreed with him, as he looks healthy and happy.

—Mr. Thomas Blackstock, late of Toronto, and son of Rev. Mr. Blackstock of this place, enters the office of Messrs. Reeve & Morden, to supply the place made vacant by the departure of Mr. E. B. Stone.

—We regret to state that Mr. J. Z. Skinner, commission merchant of this town, was called away a day or two since to attend the funeral of his brother, Dr. Skinner, of Waterown, near Hamilton. We offer Mr. Skinner our condolence.

—Messrs. Deroche and Grange left town last Tuesday for Toronto, to attend to their Parliamentary duties.

—Mr. Edward Storr and wife, of Ottawa, are spending a few days in this county, visiting friends and renewing old associations.

—Last Thursday we had the pleasure of a call from Rev. Mr. Ballentyne, who preached so eloquently on Sunday last in the Presbyterian church in this place. We are pleased to learn that the rev. gentleman is very likely to be called to the pastorate of the above church, and we think there would be wisdom in the choice. He is a devoted, earnest and eloquent preacher, graceful in diction and gesture, and one of whom any congregation might speak with pride. Though many be called, let him be chosen.

—We had yesterday the pleasure of exchanging fraternal greeting with Mr. J. Pappa, of the Addington Reporter, who was in town on business connected with that journal.

CROYDON.

Mr. Beaver,

Please allow me space for a few items. I have long had it in my mind to give you a few jottings relative to our village, and now that I have begun, I trust you will be easy with me till I get my hand in a little.

—About a year ago our village was in a deplorable condition, but a change has taken place, and things are greatly improved. Since that time Mr. John Hinch, formerly of Clarks Mills, has opened a large and well-stocked store, and we expect another one to be opened shortly.

—The grist mill has changed hands. Mr. Geo. Gordon, formerly of Forest Mills, is running it, and gives splendid satisfaction.

—Mr. James Richardson has started a boot and shoe shop. We wish him success.

—We have two blacksmith shops, two hotels, one carriage and woodwork shop, a cooper shop, saw mill, planing mill, carding and fulling mill, and everything that a country village requires.

—Weddings are quite prevalent around here lately, and report saith we are to have still another in a week or so. Get your cow bells in tune, boys.

—Several parties had quite a spree at a neighbor's house lately. It was Jimmie in the centre and all hands around. Some of the young fellows think it will be a long time before there is another gathering of its equal. Jimmie feels it worst, but we hope he will survive. More again. MONOY.

ODESSA.

From our own Correspondent.

—The missionary services of the C. M. church, in connection with the Odessa circuit, will commence on Sunday, 28th inst., when sermons will be delivered: Fourth Concession, 10:30 A.M.; Links, 2:30 P.M.; and at Odessa at 6:30 P. M., by the Rev. Jas. Allan, of Kingston; at Odessa 10:30 A. M., and at Albert 2:30 P.M., by Rev. T. B. Conley, of Wilton. Meetings will be held on Monday evening, at Albert, and at Links on Tuesday evening; deputation, Rev. E. S. Shorey and James Allan. At Odessa, Wednesday evening, 7 o'clock; deputation, Rev. W. S. Blackstock, James Allan and James Awde.

—Mrs. Fraser, mother of Mrs. Alexander Gordon, sr., of this place, died on Thursday evening of last week, at the advanced age of 94 years. She was buried on Sunday last, at the old burying ground, 4th concession.

—The sad intelligence of the death of one of our most respected citizens, Anson Lee, Esq., has cast a shadow of profound grief in this community. Mr. Lee died on Tuesday morning last at 8 A.M., at the early age of 47 years. The disease under which he succumbed, was torpidity of the liver, which he had been suffering from for several months. The deceased was a gentleman highly esteemed by those who had the pleasure of knowing him personally, and by them his genial and social presence will be greatly missed. As a public man, his loss will also be much felt, having always taken an active part in politics and municipal affairs. He served as Deputy Reeve, and was elected on several occasions as Councillor in this township, which position he filled with credit to himself and satisfaction to the electors. As a public speaker Mr. Lee had few equals in this part of the country, his fluency and good address always rendering him a favorite. At the organization of the 48th Regiment in 1866, he held the position of Lieut.-Colonel, until succeeded by Lieut.-Col. Fowler. He was a firm adherent to the British Crown, and a zealous supporter of the existing happy allegiance to the mother country. His funeral took place on Thursday morning at 10 o'clock, when his remains were followed to the vault at Wilton by a large concourse of friends and acquaintances. To his sorrowing widow and children, in which I am sure we are joined by the people of the county at large, we offer our heartfelt sympathy. May they receive those consolations, which He who chasteneth whom He loveth, can alone bestow.

—Daniel Lee, Esq. J. P. has bought a house and lot in our village and will in due course enter into the mercantile business. We wish him every success.

—Mr. B. Derbyshire has rented the lot in the rear of Wycott's hotel, which he will use as a lumber yard. He intends dealing extensively in lumber and shingles.

—A sausage maker has arrived from the East, who intends manufacturing them here on a large scale. It would be advisable, under the circumstances, for those having pet dogs and cats to tie them up for the future.

—Mrs. F. R. Wycott, whose indisposition was so severe as to occasion grave doubts as to her recovery, is slowly improving in health.

MILL POINT.

From our Own Correspondent.

—On Sunday night last Jack Frost took formal possession of the river and bay from Napanee to Trenton, which nearly closed up the navigation for the season. The high wind on Monday night, however, interfered with Jack's doings and broke up the ice on the bay, driving it along the the north shore and into the mouth of the river.

—On Monday the steamer Norfolk, with the assistance of the tug Sherwood made her way up to Napanee where she is laid up for the season.

—The steamer Picton and Alexandra, have made their last trips to Montreal and laid up in Picton harbor. The steamer Utica made an effort to come down from Trenton on Tuesday last, but having got jammed into the ice near Belleville, had to back out and return to Trenton and lay up.

—The steamer Shannon, Captain Johnson, started for Belleville on Wednesday last, and having made North Port was compelled to return to Picton in consequence of floating ice; where she is laid up for the winter.

—The steamer Kincardine, Capt. Allen, came into port on Tuesday morning from Oswego, proceeded to Belleville to discharge her cargo and returned to this port on Wednesday where she is to be hauled out, repaired and refitted during the winter.

—The "Floating Palace," Oswego Belle, Capt. Mosher, made a most satisfactory trial trip to Oswego on Saturday last with a full cargo of barley, shingles and passengers, and returned into port in gallant style via Kingston on Wednesday last, having made the run from Kingston to this port (60 miles) in four hours and a quarter being nearly fifteen miles per hour. She made her way through the ice into Napanee, where she is laid up for the winter quarters to be fully fitted up for the bay and Oswego route early next Spring.

—The steamer Ivanhoe has loaded and cleared with a cargo of lumber, bound for Clayton on her last trip for the season.

—The schooners O. S. Stone, Dominion, Lumina, Alma and Antelope are laid up here for the season, the latter is to be hauled out and rebuilt during the winter.

—The schooner Newcastle got on ground near Peterson's Ferry on Monday last and had to be pulled off bythe tug.

—The new steamer now on the stocks here building, for James McQuaig & Co., of Picton has been enlarge 20 feet in length, being now 175 feet keel and the largest steamer on the bay.

—The Cedar saw mill shut down on Wednesday for repairs and will resume work in a few weeks for the winter.

—The W. M. T. A., at Mill Point is prospering finely, and will soon number 100 good and true members.

—The steamer Rochester made her last trip up and down the bay on Wednesday last, and has laid up at Kingston.

—The large steam saw-mill of H. B. Rathbun & Son shut down on Monday last, having run seven months, and manufactured over 17,500,000 feet of lumber, besides lath, pickets, heading, etc.

—There are some 4,000,000 feet of lumber now piled up on the docks here, ready for shipment next spring, besides a large quantity of R. R. ties, cedar posts, lath, pickets, etc.

—These cold nights and wintry winds have already began to take effect upon our young men and maidens, and several matrimonial alliances "for better, for worse" have recently taken place with many more on dit. As our young people find it much more comfortable and far less expensive to keep up one fire and one bed than two these cold nights and hard times. How is that on the great marriage question?

—385 vessels have reported inwards and 492 vessels have cleared outwards with cargoes for U. S. ports, during the past season of navigation from the outward port of Mill Point, making a total of 877 vessels which have reported during the current season, besides a large number of coasting vessels who do not report.

BELLROCK.

From our Own Correspondent.

—Our juveniles are enjoying the young winter; also our older ones, as the season of festivities has re-opened with the frosty weather.

—Our friends of the Sabbath School contemplate a tea-meeting this evening for its benefit, and the children are already dreaming of Santa Claus, and sugar apples, candies, etc.

—A sad occurrence happened to our neighbor, Mr. Josiah Janes. Whilst he was out on his farm logging, his house took fire and burned. Considerable goods might have been saved, only a gun in the house was loaded and discharged while some persons were in the act of entering.

—Mr. Joseph Irish has lately been making a change in his premises, and is now engaged in improving his dwelling.

—Our spelling school, which I spoke of in my last letter, has been discontinued, as there are many who say that spelling comes by nature, and I think so too. ARTEMUS BRIZAN.

ROBLIN.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

Dear Beaver,

Toby and preceding correspondents have apparently resigned the honor of representing Roblin in your columns, to the more self-pleasing responsibility of lady corresponding. Therefore I send you a few items, which I would like inserted in your popular paper.

—A temperance hotel, for the accommodation of travellers and the public generally, has been opened in the village. Come and see; smiling Billa will make you as comfortable as at home.

—On Tuesday, the 16th inst., a fruit social was held in the schoolhouse, by the Roblin choir, but owing to the evening being blustery, the attendance was not as large as was expected.

—Water is so scarce at present, that there is not much business transacted in the lumber, shingle and milling departments.

—Rumor saith a 'Prentice Boys' lodge will be organized here shortly.

—The P. M. Minister has very wisely taken a sharer of his joys and sorrows. May happiness attend his dwelling as largely as his friends intend to a few evenings hence.

—Eight new buildings have been erected and prepared for habitation here this summer.

—Our merchants leave their oils unguarded by locks the season through, which speaks well for the Roblinites. MOAB.

BATH.

From on Occasional Correspondent.

—A team of horses backed off Mr. Finkle's wharf and fell over backward into the wagon-box, but no damage of account was done.

—The other evening when the Bath brass band was playing a few choice airs in front of Mr. Ferren's Hotel, previous to going to Mr. Jacob's concert, a Mr. Aylsworth, taking a fancy to seeing a horse dance, introduces his nimble animal to the band, whereupon the horse took fright, and, dashing down Main street at a fearful pace, came in contact with a telegraph pole on the corner, and breaking loose from the buggy, which was badly smashed, ran three miles with shafts attached. The horse was not injured, neither was Mr. Aylsworth who preferred standing on the plankwalk and allowing Mr. Asselstine (a friend of his) to handle the reins. Mr. Asselstine was thrown out of the buggy at the time of the collision, and we are pleased to say escaped with only a scratch or two. This should be a warning to young men, not to try and compel a horse to listen to music, especially the music of our band.

—The new and magnificent steamer Oswego Belle gave us a call the other day, and what the Western papers say about her is very true. Arthur Downey, Esq., one of the owners very kindly showed us through the different apartments. We can truly say, for good taste and fine workmanship she far excels any of our other boats. We are pleased to hear she is to be our daily visitor plying between Belleville and Oswego. We will guarantee a good business for her the coming season.

—On Friday last, when Willie Whiskins, a lad of fifteen, and who was at the time in the employ of Mr. Lucas Lasher, was on his way home with a grist from Link's Mills the horses took fright through some cause unknown and ran away. They were caught in Mill Haven, and on being returned, Willie, was found on the road, with several bad cuts about the head. On being lifted into a carriage, which came along at the time, he breathed his last. It is a sad affair, and the parents have the heartfelt sympathy of the whole community. Willie was a regular attendant of the Sabbath school, and being a good boy in every way, we trust he is wearing a crown of glory.

—Sad news confirming the rumor of the loss of our young friend, W. E. Purdy on the Pacific, has come. We sympathize with the family in their bereavement. F.

NEWBURGH.

From Our Own Correspondent.

—Mr. E. Chown, of Kingston, paid Newburgh a short visit on business last week.

—Mr. Marling, High School Inspector visited our school on Monday last. We hear he expressed himself much pleased with the manner the pupils acquitted themselves in the various classes, and says our school is much improved. F. Burrows, Public School Inspector was also here on Monday last, and spent a portion of the day at the Public and High Schools.

—H. M. Deroche, M. P. P., was here at 2 o'clock, P. M., on Monday last, and gave an interesting address on the subject of railways. He was listened to with great attention and lustily cheered at the close. C. H. Miller, Esq., occupied the chair. Short speeches were made by Councillors Files and Scott, Rev. W. H. Snider, Allen Caton, J. B. Aylsworth, D. B. Stickney and D. A. Burdett. Another meeting is in contemplation soon. Keep the ball rolling.

—Dr. Creighton, of Rochester, has been here visiting his brother for a few days.

—I little thought, Mr. Editor, when I intimated the humble request that you would open your columns to the discussion of the marriage question, that so much pent up talent was lying dormant. "Anthony," to my mind should have a leather medal, evidently having carried off the palm. I could have placed him sure only for the number of boots worn by him. I think he said he wore "eleven boots." Suppose you offer a chromo for them all to stop, and go for the spelling mania again.

—Beef, mutton and fowls are quite plentiful now.

—Paper Mills and Stickney's Machine Shop still running by steam, water continues low. Hooper & Davern's Mill is doing a good custom business in grinding.

—R. B. Smith, of Newburgh, now student of Victoria College, has recieved the appointment of assistant master of Pembroke High School.

—Some disconcerted persons are agitating for a new council. "Guards up and at 'em." As voting will be by ballot, you can please yourselves and who will be the wiser. Jolly, ain't it.

—Mr. M. L. Pomeroy met with quite a loss recently, having lost a fine colt purchased at Mr. Nimmo's sale, for which he paid $117. Epizootic the cause of death.

—Bush Avenue, having two willows thereon, is to be favored with a new sidewalk, which will be good for the residents thereon.

—A friend of mine handed me an American paper containing the announcement that J. D. Carscallen, Esq., of Jersey City, was regularly nominated for Speaker of the New Jersey Legislature. H. M. Deroche, M.P.P., being spoken of as Speaker for the Ontario Legislature, should both be elected it would be nice, both being former residents of Newburgh, and were students for a length of time, of Newburgh Grammar (then) and Model School.

—Mr. John Allen, of Newburgh, has sold his farm recently purchased from Mr. John Bowen, to Mr. Wm. Nugent, who also sold thirty acres to Mr. John Allen, making it more convenient for both.

—Mr. H. M. Wright, Camden, has sold that portion of his farm lying south of the Napanee road, to a Mr. McDonald.

—Lard firm; butter stiff; money tight.

—Winds are having a roving or sweeping commission.

—River congealing over.

—Business quiet.

—Cheese factory closed for the season.

—If five weddings at one hour and one house are properly termed "wholesale weddings," what should it be called when only two loving hearts grace the auspicious occasion? W. H

ON MATRIMONY.

To the Editor of THE BEAVER.

If you will allow me to make a few remarks on Matrimony, a subject which has already been ably discussed, my mind will be more at rest.

Although I have not made up my mind to put on the yoke as yet, I always had a particular liking for the word "matrimony." I am not in the habit of believing all the ladies have to say, but I can't help noticing what "Napanee Girl" said when she wrote about Toronto young men thinking that the ladies were too much stuck up and the gentlemen had to wear the best of clothes and act like puppies, etc., to gain their affection. Well, I think as she does, that it is a sad mistake, and I imagine there is something else besides wearing fine clothes and acting like puppies to be brought into consideration, for I have always noticed that he who heaped on so many duds, never accomplished as much as the one that had sense enough to carry himself through without borrowing so much self-made pride. And I would venture to say if a young man started out in search of a wife he would not care about putting on so much style, as if he only went for pastime, for I think if he wanted to make his work sure, he would think about everything else but style (at least he ought to), for of all the business ever a man took in hand, this requires the most sound thinking; but if he goes acting like a puppy, he will come out like an old dog at the end. I am not one that would despise fashion on either side of the question, but I would despise such fashion as "Country Girl" has alluded to, that is the fashion of trying to please the gentlemen's tastes and punishing themselves thereby. I don't think they will find any of this on our side of the question, for a young man likes to please himself, whether he pleases the fair sex or not.

Now, about this five hundred a-year income. Well, in my case, if I wait till I have such an income, I rather think I will have to take it out in waiting; but no, I will wait till I come across the girl who can mind her own business—one that can work from Monday morning until Saturday night (if required), without blistering her hands; the one that understands dressing herself neatly and respectably without having such an income. Lastly, the one that can do this without grumbling. I am sorry that we have so much brawling about who puts on the most style, and why matrimony has got to be a subject split up in two parts. I think it might be discussed with more unity, and if so it would be better for both sexes. I close with the language of the poet,—

When women were created first, they were a thing of evil,
They are proud as Lucifer, deceitful as the Devil;
They'll dress themselves in rich array, like mermaids they will sing,
But if they catch a man in their snare, like serpents they will sting.

I think I have taken up enough of your space, but I haven't given all my thoughts on the subject. I guess I will quit, for dinner is ready, and I hear somebody calling. EDD.

CAMDEN, Nov. 22d, 1875.

To the Editor of THE BEAVER.

DEAR SIR,—I observe that in Chicago, Toronto and elsewhere considerable newspaper correspondence is taking place on the most interesting conundrum, "why young men do not marry?" Knowing that your paper is fully up with the times, I am desirous of ventilating my views on the subject. As a schoolboy, not adverse to marrying, I would like to get information from those who ought to know. If a bachelor has a salary of $800 per annum, and no encumbrance but himself, the question that agitates his mind is whether that amount is sufficient in the present era of feminine extravagance to launch his bark on the matrimonial sea. It is a well known fact that the young women of the present time (those of Napanee being no exception to the general rule), are not usually fitted for a poor man's wife. In order to keep up with modern society, they disdain housework as worthy of contempt,—something that may be good enough for their mothers, but with which they are bound not to soil their pretty fingers. Young women nowadays learn one art, that of being able to captivate. Their personal adornment is their greatest study, and very few give any thought to the future or its possibilities. Now for their intellectual qualities. Do we find their minds stored with history, biography, and works of a similar nature? Their intellectual culture consists in reading the latest novels and acquiring by heart a few verses of sentimental poetry, which they quote at random to any gentleman that is unfortunate enough to call. I ask if the young lady of the period, adorned with modern acquirements, is a suitable helpmate for life? They may make good pictures, but will not stand the wear. SCHOOL-BOY.

Protection of Game.

Correspondence of The Globe.

SIR,—As the Legislature is about to meet, I beg leave to call the attention of your readers to the game laws of our Province, and more especially to that part relating to deer. As there is nothing in the above named statute to prevent the chasing of deer with dogs. As soon as the first of September comes huntsmen repair to the woods. Then commences a scene which for cruelty to animals is almost without a parallel. It is surely a pity that those beautiful and majestic animals given to us by a wise and bountiful benefactor for our good, should be chased for hours, and very often at last mutilated and rendered unfit for use. I am informed that in several of the States south of us they have very stringent laws for the protection of their game, yet strange to say they are allowed to come from time to time and take whatever game suits them out of our forests, and by whatever means best serves their purpose. I will just refer to two other fruitful sources of destruction to our deer, namely, the wolves and the settler's dogs. In the months of February and March the snow is usually deep, and very often covered with a crust of ice. Then is the opportunity for these animals to worry and mangle their prey. Now, sir, the remedy I propose is simply to enact a law in the Legislature to prevent the chasing of deer with dogs at any season of the year, or to give power to the local municipalities to pass by-laws to that effect, and to give a liberal bounty to Indians and others for killing wolves in surveyed as well unsurveyed districts. I believe the result of this proposed legislation would be to preserve and increase the number of the beautiful animals, which are so much prized in other countries where the land and the population do not bear the same ratio as they do here. We have an unlimited source of sustenance and shelter for at least a thousandfold more deer than we have. All they ask is the privilege of our forests and our streams. Why refuse suitable protection to those animals, which by wise and judicious management would prove a source of luxury and wealth? I must now close by reminding you that unless better protection is given to our deer in the future than there has been in the past they will very soon become extinct, and a few years hence the student of nature may perchance discovered buried in some of our marshes a skeleton belonging to the deer tribe, and may fail to discover what has been the character, habits, and use of this noble and useful animal, which has rendered so much aid in the hour of need and suffering to many of our fellow-creatures. Yours truly, A. CANADIAN.

TESTIMONIALS
From Dr. Duncan McCallum:
I, the undersigned, have been suffering very much for the last two years from Rheumatism in the ankle joint, so much so that I was often prevented from attending to my calling, but three applications of "Dr. Birnbaum's Rheumatism and Gout Remedy" gave me that relief from pain and stiffness which I did not experience for the last two years, and after eight days' use of this remedy I find myself entirely cured.
I owe this statement to the public, to the profession, and to the merits of that genuine article.

Life's Game.

This life is but a game of cards,
Which each man tries to learn;
He shuffles, cuts and deals the deck,
And each a trump does turn.
Some turn a high card to the top,
Whilst others turn the low;
Some in their hands are flushed with trumps,
While others none can show.
When hearts are trumps we play for love,
And pleasure rules the hour;
No thoughts of sorrow damp our joy
With their depressing power.
When diamonds chance to crown the deck,
Then revellers play for gold;
And mines of wealth are lost and won
By gamblers young and old.
When clubs are trumps, look out for war,
On ocean or on land;
Appalling deeds are sometimes done
When clubs are in the hand.
But last of all is when the spade
Has turned by hand of time;
'Tis he that [illegible]eth every game
In every land and clime;
No matter how a man may win
Or how much he may lose;
You'll find the spade turns up at last
And digs each player's grave.

CHAPTER VII.

MALCOLM EVERETT.

It would be tiresome both to ourselves and our readers, were we to enumerate the many mortifications which both Mr. and Mrs. Livingstone were compelled to endure from their mother, who gradually came to understand her true position in the family.

Dreading a scene which he knew was sure to follow a disclosure of his engagement with Miss Nancy, Mr. Livingstone had requested his mother to keep it from his wife, and she, appreciated his motive, promised secrecy, lamenting the while the ill-fortune which had prevented Nancy from being her daughter-in-law, and dwelling frequently upon the comfort she should take were Nancy there in Matida's place. On the whole, however, she was tolerably contented.

Still her Massachusetts friends were not forgotten, and many a letter, wonderful for its composition and orthography, found its way to Nancy Scovandyke, who wrote in return that "some time or other she should surely visit Kentucky," asking further if the "big bugs" didn't prefer eastern teachers for their children, and hinting at her desire to engage in that capacity when she came south!

"Now, that's the very thing," exclaimed Mrs. Nichols, folding the letter (directly wrong side up), and resuming her knitting. "Nancy's learnin' is plenty good enough to teach Car'line and Anny, and I mean to speak to John about it right away."

"I wouldn't do any such thing," said Lena, seeing at a glance how such a proposal would be received.

"Why not?" asked Mrs. Nichols, and Lena replied, "I don't think Nancy would suit Aunt Livingstone at all, and besides that, they've engaged a teacher, a Mr. Everett, and expect him next week."

"You don't say so?" returned Mrs. Nichols. "I never hearn a word on't. Where 'bouts is he from, and how much do they give him a week?"

The latter Lena knew nothing about, but she replied that "she believed he was from Rockford, a village near Rochester, New York."

"Why, Nancy Scovandyke's sister lives there. I wouldn't wonder if he knew her."

"Very likely," returned Lena, catching her bonnet and hurrying off to ride with Captain Atherton and Anna.

As we have once before observed, Anna was a great favorite with the captain, who petted her until John Jr. teased her unmercifully, calling him her gray-haired lover, and the like. This made Anna exceedingly sensitive, and now when the captain called for her to ride, as he frequently did, she refused to go unless the invitation was also extended to Lena, who in this way got many a pleasant ride around the country. She was fast learning to like Kentucky, and would have been very happy had her aunt and Carrie been a little more gracious. But the former seldom spoke to her, and the latter only to ridicule something which she said or did.

Mr. Livingstone secured the services of Mr. Everett, who was highly recommended as a scholar and gentleman, and determined that Lena should share the same advantages with his daughters. To this Mrs. Livingstone made no serious objection, as Mr. Everett would teach in the house, and [illegible] to debar Lena from the [illegible] attending his school; and as the [illegible] position to which she could aspire [illegible] governess in some private family, [illegible] that she should have a chance of [illegible] the common branches.

[illegible] Mr. Everett was daily expected. [illegible] had no fondness for books, greatly [illegible] his arrival, thinking within herself [illegible] pranks she'd play off upon him provided Lena would lend a helping hand, which [illegible] doubted. John Jr., too, who for [illegible] at least, was to be placed under Mr. Everett's instruction, felt in no wise eager for his arrival, fearing, as he told Lena, that "between the 'old man' and the tutor, he would be kept a little too straight for a gentleman of his habits;" and it was with no particular emotions of pleasure that he and Anna saw the stage stop before the gate one pleasant morning toward the middle of November. Running to one of the front windows, Carrie, Lena, and Anna watched their new teacher, each after her own fashion commenting upon his appearance.

"Ugh!" exclaimed Anna, "what a green, [illegible] looking thing! I reckon nobody's going to be afraid of him."

"I say he's real handsome," said Carrie, who being thirteen years of age, had already, in her own mind, practised many a little coquetry upon the stranger.

"I like him," was Lena's brief remark.

Mr. Everett was a pale, intellectual looking man, scarcely twenty years of age, and appearing still younger, so that Anna was not wholly wrong when she called him boyish. Still there was in his large black eye a firmness and decision which bespoke the man [illegible] within him, and which put to flight all of Anna's preconceived notions of rebellion.

With the utmost composure he returned Mrs. Livingstone's greeting, and the proud lady half bit her lip with vexation as she saw how little he seemed awed by her presence.

Malcolm Everett was not one to acknowledge superiority where there was none, and though ever polite toward Mrs. Livingstone, there was something in his manner which forbade her treating him as aught save an equal. He was not to be trampled down, and for once in her life Mrs. Livingstone had met a person who would neither cringe to her nor flatter. The children were not presented to him till dinner time. Mr. Livingstone was not at home, and when his mother appeared Mrs. Livingstone did not think proper to introduce her. But if by this omission she thought to keep the old lady silent, she was mistaken, for the moment Mrs. Nichols was seated, she commenced with "Your name is Everett, I b'lieve?"

"Yes, ma'am," said he, bowing very gracefully toward her.

"Any kin to the governor that was?"

"No, ma'am, none whatever," and his white teeth became slightly visible for a moment, but soon disappeared.

"You are from Rockford, Lena tells me?"

"Yes, ma'am; have you any friends there?"

"[illegible] or that is, Nancy Scovandyke's sister, [illegible] Scovandyke that used to be, lives [illegible]. May be you know her. Her name is [illegible] Bacon. She's a widder and [illegible] boarders."

"[illegible]," said he, "I've heard of Mrs. Bacon, [illegible] not the honor of her acquaintance. [illegible] from the east, I perceive."

"[illegible] how did you know that?" [illegible] Mrs. Nichols, while Mr. Everett answered, "I guessed at it," with a peculiar [illegible] on the word guessed, which led [illegible] think he had used it purposely and [illegible].

Mr. Everett possessed in a remarkable degree the faculty of making those around him respect and like him, and ere six weeks [illegible] he had won the love of his pupils. [illegible] John Jr. was greatly improved, and [illegible] seemed suddenly reawakened into a thirst for knowledge, deeming no task too long, and no amount of study too hard, if it won the commendation of her teacher. Lena, who committed to memory with great ease, and who consequently did not deserve so much credit for her always perfect lessons, seldom received a word of praise, while poor Anna, notoriously lazy when books were concerned, cried almost every day, because, as she said, "Mr. Everett didn't like her as he did the rest, else why did he look at her so much, watching her all the while, and keeping her after school to get her lesson over, when he knew how she hated them."

Once Mrs. Livingstone ventured to remonstrate, telling him that Anna was very sensitive, and required altogether different treatment from Carrie. "She thinks you dislike her," said she, "and while she retains this impression, she will do nothing so far as learning is concerned; so if you do not like her, try and make her think you do!"

There was a peculiar look in Mr. Everett's dark eyes as he answered, "You may think it strange Mrs. Livingstone, but of all my pupils I love Anna best! I know I find more fault with her, and am perhaps more severe with her than with the rest, but it's because I would make her what I wish her to be. Pardon me, madam, but Anna does not possess the same amount of intellect with her cousin or sister, but by proper culture she will make a fine, intelligent woman."

Mrs. Livingstone hardly relished being told that one child was inferior to the other, but she could not well help herself—Mr. Everett would say what he pleased—and thus the conference ended. From that time Mr. Everett was exceedingly kind to Anna. Erelong the result of all this became manifest. Anna grew fonder of her books, and more ready to learn, and—more willing to be kept after school!

Ah, little did Mrs. Livingstone think what she was doing when she bade young Malcolm Everett make her warm-hearted, impulsive daughter think he liked her!

CHAPTER VIII.

SCHEMING.

"Mother, where's Lena's dress? Hasn't she got any?" asked Anna, one morning, about two weeks before Christmas, as she bent over a promiscuous pile of merinoes, delanes, and plaid silks, her own and Carrie's dresses for the coming holidays. "Say, mother, didn't you buy Lena any?"

Thus interrogated, Mrs. Livingstone replied, "I wonder if you think I'm made of money! Lena is indebted to me now for more than she can ever pay. As long as I give her a home and am at so much expense in educating her, she of course can't expect me dress her as I do you. There's Carrie's brown delane and your blue one, which I intend to have made over for her, and she ought to be satisfied with that, for they are much better than anything she had when she came here."

And the lady glanced toward the spot where Lena sat admiring the new things, in which she had no share, and longing to ask the question which Anna had asked for her, and which had now been answered. John Jr., who was present, and who knew that Mr. Everett had been engaged to teach in the family long before it was known that Lena was coming, now said to his cousin, who arose to leave, "Yes Lena, mother's a model of generosity, and you'll never be able to repay her for her kindness in allowing you to wear the girls' old duds, which would otherwise be given to the blacks, and in permitting you to recite to Mr. Everett, who, of course, was hired on your account."

The slamming together of the door as Lena left the room brought the young gentleman's remarks to a close, and wishing to escape the lecture which he saw was preparing for him, he, too, made his exit.

Christmas was coming, and with it Durward Bellmont, and about his coming Mrs. Livingstone felt some little anixiety. Always scheming, and always looking ahead, she was expecting great results from this visit. Durward was not only immensely wealthy, but was also descended on his father's side from one of England's noblemen. Altogether he was, she thought, a "decided catch," and though he was only sixteen, while Carrie was but thirteen, life-long impressions had been made even at an earlier period, and Mrs. Livingstone resolved that her pretty daughter should at least have all the advantages of dress with which to set off her charms. Concerning Anna's appearance she cared less, for she had but little hope of her, unless, indeed—but 't was too soon to think of that,—she would wait, and perhaps in good time 't would all come round naturally and as a matter of course. So she encouraged her daughter's intimacy with Captain Atherton, who, until Malcolm Everett appeared, was in Anna's estimation the best man living. Now, however, she made an exception in favor of her teacher, "who," as she told the captain, "neither wore false teeth, nor kept in his pocket a pair of specks, to be slyly used when he fancied no one saw him."

Captain Atherton coughed, colored, laughed, and saying that "Mr. Everett was a nicish kind of a boy," swore eternal enmity toward him, and under the mask of friendship—watched! Eleven years before, when Anna was a baby, Mrs. Livingstone had playfully told the captain, who was one day deploring his want of a wife, that if he would wait he should have daughter. To this he agreed, and the circumstance, trivial as it was, made a more than ordinary impression upon his mind; and though he as yet had no definite idea that the promise would ever be fulfilled, the little girl was to him an object of uncommon interest.

Christmas week was to be spent by Durward Bellmont partly at Captain Atherton's and partly at her own house, and as Mrs. Livingstone was not ignorant of the effect a becoming dress has upon a pretty face, she determined that Carrie should, at least, have that advantage. Anna, too, was to fare like her sister, while no thought was bestowed upon poor Lena's wardrobe, until her husband, who accompanied her to Frankfort, suggested that a certain pattern, which he fancied would be becoming to Lena, should be purchased.

With an angry scowl, Mrs. Livingstone muttered something about "spending so much money for other folks' young ones." Then remembering the old delaines, and knowing by the tone of her husband's voice that he was in earnest, she quickly rejoined, "Why, Lena's got two new dresses at home."

Never doubting his wife's word, Mr. Livingstone was satisfied, and nothing more was said upon the subject. Business of importance made it necessary for him to go for a few weeks to New Orleans, and he was now on his way thither, his wife having accompanied him as far as Frankfort. When Lena left the room after learning that she had no part in the mass of Christmas finery, she repaired to the arbor bridge, where she had wept so bitterly on the first day of her arrival, and which was now her favorite resort. In her meditations there, she resolved that not one among them loved her but Anna, and would not her affection change as they grew older? Then her thoughts took another direction. Durward Bellmont was coming—but did she wish to see him? Could she bear the sneering remarks which she knew Carrie would make concerning herself?

Many a time had she tried to penetrate the dark mystery of her birth, but her grandmother was wholly noncommittal. Once, too, when her uncle seemed kinder than usual, she had ventured to ask him of her father, and with a frown he had replied, that "the least she knew of him the better!" Still Lena felt sure that he was a good man, and that some time or other she would find him.

All day long the clouds had been threatening rain, which began to fall soon after Lena entered the arbor, but so absorbed was she in her own thoughts, that she did not observe it until her clothes were perfectly dampened; then starting up, she repaired to the house. For several days she had not been well, and this exposure brought on a severe cold, which confined her to her room for nearly two weeks. Meantime the dress-making process went on, Anna keeping Lena constantly apprised of its progress, and occasionally wearing in some article for her inspection. This reminded Lena of her own wardrobe, and knowing that it would not be attended to while she was sick, she made such haste to be well, that on Thursday at tea time she took her accustomed seat at the table. After supper she lingered awhile in the parlor, hoping something would be said, but she waited in vain, and was about leaving, when a few words spoken by Carrie in an adjoining room caught her ear and arrested her attention.

They were—"And so Lena came down tonight. I dare say she thinks you'll set Miss Simpson at work upon my old delaine."

"Perhaps so," returned Mrs. Livingstone, "but I don't see how Miss Simpson can do it, unless you put off having the silk apron embroidered."

"I shan't do any such thing," said Carrie, glad of an excuse to keep Lena out of the way. "What matter is it if she don't come down when the company is here? I'd rather she wouldn't, for she's so green and awkward and Durward is so fastidious in such matters, that I'd rather he wouldn't know she's a relative of ours! I know he'd tell his mother, and they say she is very particular about his associates."

Lena's first impulse was to defy her cousin to her face—to tell her she had seen Durward Bellmont, and that he didn't laugh at her either. But her next thought was calmer and more rational. Possibly under Carrie's influence he might make fun of her, and resolving on no condition whatever to make herself visible while he was in the house, she returned to her room, and throwing herself upon the bed wept until she fell asleep.

"When is Miss Simpson going to fix Lena's dress?" asked Anna, as day after day passed, and nothing was said of the brown delaine.

For an instant Miss Simpson's nimble fingers were still, as she awaited the answer to a question which had occurred to her several times. She was a kind-hearted, intelligent girl, and at a glance had seen how matters stood. She, too, was an orphan, and her sympathies were enlisted in behalf of the neglected Lena. She had heard from Anna of the brown delaine, and in her own mind she had determined that it should be fitted with the utmost taste.

Her speculations, however, were brought to a close by Mrs. Livingstone's saying, in reply to Anna, that Lena seemed so wholly uninterested, and cared so little about seeing the company, she had decided not to have the dress fixed until after Christmas week.

The fiery expression of two large, glittering eyes, which at that moment peered in at the door, convinced Miss Simpson that her employer had hardly told the truth, and she secretly determined that Lena should have the dress whether she would or not. Accordingly, the next time she and Anna were alone, she asked for the delaine, entrusting her secret to Anna, who thinking no harm, promised to keep it from her mother. But to get Lena fitted was a more difficult matter. Her spirit was roused, and for a time she resisted their combined efforts. At last, however, she yielded, and by working late at night in her own room, Miss Simpson managed to finish the dress, in which Lena really looked better than did either of her cousins in their garments of far richer materials. Still she was resolved not to go down, and Anna, fearing what her mother might say, dared not urge her very strongly, hoping, though, that "something would turn up."

BY CHRONIC WASTING DISease is understood those old lingering complaints so protracted in their course, and debilitating in their effect upon the health, which ordinarily depend upon healthy influences, as in consumption and scrofula or are the result of depraved nutrition, from imperfect assimilation of food and impoverished blood. Unless the digestive process is complete, material is not prepared for nourishing the tissues and repairing the waste resulting from mental and physical exertion; diminution of constitutional vigor is soon apparent, and the vital organs, partaking of the general debility, speedily manifest symptoms of derangement. It is in this class of cases that DR. WHEELER'S COMPOUND ELIXIR OF PHOSPHATES AND CALISAYA demonstrates its extraordinary restorative properties, being at once a chemical food and medicament of the highest value.
